EDITOR'S PREFACE

The objective of this book is to provide tax professionals involved in disputes with revenue authorities in multiple jurisdictions with an outline of the principal issues arising in those jurisdictions. In this, the fifth edition, we have continued to add to the key jurisdictions where disputes are likely to occur for multinational businesses.

Each chapter provides an overview of the procedural rules that govern tax appeals and highlights the pitfalls of which taxpayers need to be most aware. Aspects that are particularly relevant to multinationals, such as transfer pricing, are also considered. In particular, we have asked the authors to address an area where we have always found worrying and subtle variations in approach between courts in different jurisdictions, namely the differing ways in which double tax conventions can be interpreted and applied.

The idea behind this book commenced in 2013 with the general increase in litigation as tax authorities in a number of jurisdictions took a more aggressive approach to the collection of tax – in response, no doubt, to political pressure to address tax avoidance. In the UK alone we have seen the tax authority vested with broad new powers not only of disclosure but even to require tax to be paid in advance of any determination by a court that it is due. The provisions empower the revenue authority, an administrative body, to compel payment of a sum, the subject of a genuine dispute, without any form of judicial control or appeal.

Over the past year the focus on perceived cross-border abuses has continued with action by the European Commission on past tax rulings in Ireland, Luxembourg and Belgium, and the BEPS reaching a crescendo in the announcement of a 'diverted profits tax' to impose an additional tax in the UK when it is felt that a multinational is subject to too little corporation tax even in an EU context. The general targeting of cross-border tax avoidance now has European legislation in the Anti-Tax Avoidance Directive, which came into force in June 2016 with promises of more to follow. The absence of much European legislation in direct tax has always been put down to the need for unanimity and the way in which Member States closely guard their taxing rights. The relatively speedy passage of this legislation (the Parent–Subsidiary Directive before it took some 10 years to pass) and its restriction of attractive tax regimes indicates the general political disrepute with which such practices are now viewed.

These are, perhaps, extreme examples, reflective of the parliamentary cycle, yet a general toughening of stance seems to be being felt. In that light, this book provides an overview of each jurisdiction's anti-avoidance rules and any alternative mechanisms for resolving tax disputes, such as mediation, arbitration or restitution claims.

We have attempted to give readers a flavour of the tax litigation landscape in each jurisdiction. The authors have looked to the future, and have summarised the policies and approaches of the revenue authorities regarding contentious matters, addressing important questions such as how long cases take and situations in which some form of settlement might be available.

We have been lucky to obtain contributions from the leading tax litigation practitioners in their jurisdictions. Many of the authors are members of the EU Tax Group, a collection of independent law firms, of which we are a member, involved particularly in challenges to the compatibility of national tax laws with EU and EEA rights. We hope that you will find this book informative and useful.

Finally, I would like to acknowledge the hard work of my colleague Ramsey Chagoury in the editing and compilation of this book.

TAX APPEALS TO THE EUROPEAN COURT OF JUSTICE

I THE EUROPEAN COURT

i Access through national courts and preliminary rulings

European Union law has primacy over the national law of EU Member States. This applies to both primary EU law, in particular the Treaty on European Union and the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and secondary law, such as the EU legislation on VAT and excise duties.

For most tax cases involving EU law, access to the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) is via the national courts. A tax appeal brought in the national courts of a Member State may raise a question concerning the interpretation of the provisions of EU law. This arises most commonly in cases where a taxpayer claims that national tax provisions are contrary to superior rules of EU law; for example, a claim that a corporation tax provision is contrary to Article 49 TFEU on freedom of establishment, or that a VAT provision is contrary to the EU VAT legislation. National courts, as courts of EU law as well as national law, have the obligation to ensure proper application of EU law in disputes falling within their jurisdiction. Under Article 267 TFEU, a lower national court may, where a question of EU law is raised before it, refer the case to the CJEU to obtain a preliminary ruling on that question if it considers that it needs to be determined for the court to be able to give judgment. A national court may refer the matter to the CJEU at the request of the parties or on its own motion.<sup>2</sup> Lower courts have wide discretion about whether to refer, and may do so even where they would otherwise be bound by a decision of a superior national court, including in connection with decisions given in the same proceedings.<sup>3</sup> Moreover, the lower courts' right to refer remains notwithstanding any decision of a superior court quashing a reference that they have made.<sup>4</sup>

Under Paragraph 3 of Article 267 TFEU, a national court against whose decision there is no judicial remedy under national law (i.e., the highest appellate court) is obliged to refer to the CJEU any question concerning the interpretation of EU law that is necessary to enable it to render judgment. Where a national supreme court has a discretion whether to hear an appeal from the lower courts, the supreme court acts as the final court for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU in hearing the application for permission to appeal.

The only cases where the obligation to refer does not apply are where the CJEU has already ruled on the question or on a materially identical question in a similar case, or where the correct application of EU law is so obvious as to leave no scope for any reasonable doubt (acte clair).<sup>5</sup> The threshold for acte clair is a high one. The national court 'must be convinced that the matter is equally obvious to the courts of the other Member States and to the Court of Justice'.<sup>6</sup>

Where a supreme court fails to make a reference, it may be open to a taxpayer to bring a case in damages in respect of that failure.<sup>7</sup> However, such a case must again be brought in the national courts and will succeed only if it is found that the failure to refer constitutes a manifest breach of EU law.

The obligation to refer is imposed on national supreme courts because, in most cases, individual taxpayers do not have direct access to the CJEU. Tax appeals against decisions of national tax authorities must be brought in the national courts using domestic remedies and procedures. It is for the national courts to apply EU law to the facts of the case after, where necessary, seeking guidance from the CJEU. Where they do so, the interpretative guidance given by the CJEU is binding on them.

An order for reference must meet the requirements of Article 267 TFEU. If it does not, the CJEU will lack jurisdiction and will decline to provide a response other than on the question of jurisdiction.<sup>8</sup> An important requirement for Article 267 to be engaged is that the reference must be from a court or tribunal that requires a ruling to determine a genuine dispute. Thus, the Court of Justice does not accept references from a body that does not meet the necessary standard of impartiality and independence from the decision-maker whose decision is challenged. Under many continental systems, the first level of tax appeals is to a higher administrative authority that is not a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267. A reference can only be made when a further appeal is made to the courts. To determine whether the body making the reference is a court or tribunal that may make such a reference, the Court will consider a number of factors, including ‘whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent.’<sup>9</sup>

While the CJEU largely leaves the national court to determine whether it needs a ruling, it will refuse to provide a ruling in extreme cases where the reference manifestly has no relevance to the facts or the dispute is clearly hypothetical.<sup>10</sup> It is nevertheless possible for the Court to rule upon a reference where on the facts EU rights are not engaged at all, provided that guidance on the interpretation of EU law is required by the national referring court to give its judgment. This will arise, for example, where a national provision applies in both a domestic and an EU context, and the correct interpretation of EU law will inform the interpretation to be given in a domestic context.<sup>11</sup>

The order for referral from the national referring court must be accompanied by sufficient factual and legislative material to enable the Court of Justice to understand the context in which the issue for determination arises. However, it is only in the most extreme cases, where the absence of material would risk rendering the ruling hypothetical, that the Court will reject the order for reference for this reason.<sup>12</sup>

ii The CJEU: composition and procedure<sup>13</sup>

The CJEU comprises a higher court (the Court of Justice) and a lower court (the General Court). Referrals for preliminary rulings from national courts are heard by the Court of Justice. Although not explicitly laid down, in practice there is one judge per EU country. The Court is assisted by 11 advocates general whose job is to present opinions on the cases brought before the Court. The opinions are not binding on the Court but provide an impartial view intended to assist it in coming to its decision. Each judge and advocate general is appointed for a six-year term, which can be renewed.

A judge and an advocate general are assigned to each case that is referred to the Court of Justice. Cases are dealt with in two phases: a written phase and an oral phase. In the written phase, the parties to the dispute before the national court, any EU Member State and the European Commission all have the right to submit written observations to the Court. There is no right to respond in writing to any submissions. The oral stage is a relatively short public hearing of the case. Depending on the complexity of the case, this can take place before a panel of three, five or, very rarely, 13 judges (the whole court). Those entitled to submit written observations can also appear at the hearing, regardless of whether they have in fact lodged written submissions.

13 See further the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union at Protocol (No. 3) to the TFEU (Consolidated version), Official Journal of the EU (26 October 2012) C326/01; Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice (Consolidated version), Official Journal of the EU (26 June 2013) L173; Supplementary Rules of the Court of Justice, Official Journal of the EU (1 February 2014) L32/37.

Oral submissions before the Court of Justice are expected not to exceed 15 to 20 minutes, although on written application the Court can grant an extension to a maximum time limit of 30 minutes. It is also possible on written application to enable more than one advocate to appear, particularly when representations are to be made on behalf of more than one party, but all submissions must in principle be made within the same 15 to 30 minute time limit. The taxpayer must deliver oral submissions in the language of the case. The order of oral submissions is first the taxpayer, then the Member States in alphabetical order of country name in the language of the country, and finally the Commission. Reply submissions are possible, but are expected to be limited to a few minutes only.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Justice in preliminary ruling cases is limited to providing guidance on the interpretation of EU law. It has no jurisdiction to make findings of fact or national law. Where there are factual disputes or disputes as to the meaning of national legislation that are material to the Court's ruling, the Court generally endeavours to provide the national court with sufficient guidance to cover the respective positions.

After the hearing, and usually a few months later, the advocate general gives his or her opinion. There is no procedure as such for commenting on opinions. If, however, the advocate general makes a material error in understanding the national legislation or facts, it is possible to alert the Court to the error by writing to the registry, and very exceptionally parties have successfully sought a reopening of the oral procedure. Where such an error occurs, the advocate general may revise the opinion or, where the oral procedure is reopened, give a second opinion.<sup>14</sup> The possibility of alerting the Court to errors is not to be used by the parties as an excuse to seek to argue the case further.

Following the opinion, the judges deliberate on the case and give their judgment. The judgment is a single judgment, if necessary arrived at by majority decision.

The Court's Rules of Procedure, which were substantially revised in 2012, allow the Court considerable flexibility in dealing with cases. It may, for example, dispense with an oral hearing or with the advocate general's opinion, and in very simple cases may simply issue a reasoned order rather than giving a full judgment.

At the request of the referring court (or exceptionally by his or her own motion), and where the nature of the case requires that it be dealt with in a shortened time frame, the President of the Court may order an expedited procedure and set the relevant time limits. However, if a case follows its normal course, then judgment can be expected within two years of the referral being made by the national court.

iii Proceedings by the Commission

In addition to the preliminary ruling procedure under Article 267 TFEU, it is open to the European Commission to institute proceedings before the Court of Justice for a declaration that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations under EU law. These proceedings may also be started by another EU country, although this is comparatively rare. Where the Commission brings such an action, it must follow the procedure set out in Article 258 TFEU. This provides that it must first give the Member State concerned the opportunity to submit its observations on the supposed breach of EU law and, if the Commission is not satisfied, issue a formal reasoned opinion on the matter. If the Member State fails to comply with the opinion within the period laid down by the Commission, the Commission may then institute proceedings before the CJEU.

Where the Court finds that a Member State is in breach of EU law, the latter is obliged to amend its legislation to remedy the situation. In some circumstances the legislation may have already been amended, with retrospective effect, before the Court's decision has been made.<sup>15</sup> If the Member State fails to amend the relevant legislation following the Court's decision, the Commission may bring a further action under Article 260 TFEU against the Member State seeking the imposition of a fine. A judgment of the Court under Article 258 TFEU may also provide the basis for claims by taxpayers through their national courts. However, while in bringing a case the Commission often acts upon complaints received by individual taxpayers or associations of taxpayers,<sup>16</sup> it is not directly concerned with the rights of individual taxpayers. The Commission's concern is purely with the prospective rectification of the national law. Even where the Commission brings a case, it is important for taxpayers to ensure that they make the necessary claims using domestic procedures within the time limits laid down by national law. While Commission action is not a substitute for making a claim using domestic remedies, it may nonetheless be helpful for taxpayers litigating in their national courts.

Commission action is delimited by a letter of formal notice sent by the Commission to the Member State concerned and the reasoned opinion issued by the Commission, which cannot be extended. Subsequent changes in the law thereafter are ignored.<sup>17</sup>

iv Actions by Member States against the institutions

A less common form of proceedings before the Court of Justice in tax cases are actions brought by Member States to challenge acts of the EU institutions under Article 263 TFEU. An example of this is the recent challenge by the UK to the proposed financial transactions tax (FTT), which led to a CJEU judgment of 30 April 2014.<sup>18</sup> The UK sought the annulment of a decision authorising 11 participating Member States to introduce a common FTT through the enhanced cooperation procedure. The CJEU dismissed the UK's application, noting that it was premature, and that the review of the decision authorising the use of enhanced cooperation should not be confused with any subsequent review undertaken in the context of an application for annulment of measures adopted for the purposes of implementing such enhanced cooperation. The FTT remains under discussion.<sup>19</sup> There is still no consensus between the participating Member States on the scope of the tax and how it should be levied. Nonetheless, if any FTT system does emerge, it will be interesting to see whether that system will itself be subject to challenges.

15 For example, Case C-112/14 European Commission v. UK, judgment of 13 November 2013.

16 The procedure for making such a complaint to the Commission is explained at ec.europa.eu/atwork/applying-eu-law/complaints\_en.htm. An optional form for that purpose can also be found on the website.

17 For example, Case C-38/10 European Commission v. Portuguese Republic, judgment of 6 September 2012.

18 Case C-209/13 UK v. Council.

19 See the European Commission's web page 'Taxation of the financial sector' at ec.europa.eu/taxation\_customs/taxation/other\_taxes/financial\_sector/index\_en.htm.

v Direct access by taxpayers to the General Court

The main tax cases that are brought directly before the CJEU are those in which the taxpayer takes action not against the decisions of national tax authorities but against the Commission to seek the annulment of a Commission decision addressed to it or directly affecting it (e.g. , in the field of fiscal state aid or competition). Such cases are heard first by the General Court. From there, an appeal lies on a point of law to the Court of Justice. Appeals against such a decision must be brought within the two-month time limit laid down by Article 263 TFEU. Care must be taken, because if a litigant fails to bring an action in the General Court that was clearly open to it, there is a risk that it may be unable to challenge the validity of the decision in the course of national proceedings implementing the decision.<sup>20</sup>

II RECENT CJEU CASE LAW ON TAXATION

The numerous judgments that the CJEU gives in tax cases each year are predominantly concerned with the interpretation of the EU VAT and excise duty legislation, and the compatibility of national tax provisions with the Treaty state aid rules and fundamental freedoms.

i VAT

VAT is a largely harmonised tax and therefore, unsurprisingly, accounts for many of the tax cases each year. These tend to concern the interpretation, against a particular factual background, of specific provisions of the principal VAT Directive (2006/112/EC): for example, the provisions on exemptions, definition of taxable persons and economic activity, the right to deduct input VAT, the taxable amount, and special schemes such as the scheme for travel agents. In interpreting the Directive, the Court has regard in particular to the scheme of the Directive and the underlying aim of fiscal neutrality, as well as to the context in which particular provisions appear.

Two important general themes in recent VAT case law merit particular mention:

- a First, following its judgment in the field of agriculture in Emsland-Stärke,<sup>21</sup> the Court received a series of references from national courts asking about the application of the doctrine of abuse of law in the field of VAT.<sup>22</sup> In those cases, the Court introduced the doctrine into the VAT area and set out the circumstances in which taxpayers' arrangements were to be considered abusive, with the consequence that taxpayers were precluded from relying on the Directive. The Court held that the conditions for abuse were met where:
- notwithstanding the fact that the conditions laid down by the Directive and the national implementing legislation formally applied, the taxpayer's arrangements resulted in a tax advantage contrary to the purpose of the legislation; and

20 Case C-188/92 TWD Textilwerke Deggendorf [1994] ECR I-833. See also Case C-222/04 Cassa di Risparmio di Firenze [2006] ECR I-289.

21 Case C-110/99 Emsland-Stärke [2000] ECR I-11569.

22 Case C-255/02 Halifax [2006] ECR I-1609; Case C-419/02 BUPA Hospitals [2006] ECR I-1685; Case C-223/03 University of Huddersfield [2006] ECR I-1751; Case C-103/09 Weald Leasing [2010] ECR I-13589; Case C-277/09 RBS Deutschland Holding [2010] ECR I-13805; Case C-589/12 GMAC UK plc, judgment of 3 September 2014.

- it was apparent from a number of objective factors that the essential aim of the arrangements was to obtain a tax advantage.<sup>23</sup>

b A second recurring issue is the compatibility of Member States' implementation of the VAT Directive with general principles of EU law, such as legal certainty, proportionality effectiveness and, with VAT, the principle of fiscal neutrality. For example, in the 2015 Macikowski case,<sup>24</sup> the CJEU held that fiscal neutrality and proportionality did not preclude a national provision, under which a court enforcement officer was liable with his entire assets for the amount of VAT due on the proceeds of the sale of immovable property effected through enforcement where he did not discharge his obligation to collect and pay that tax. More generally, a number of recent cases have raised the question of whether compliance requirements and the burden of proof imposed on taxpayers are proportionate, and whether the means available to taxpayers or their customers to assert their right to repayment of unlawfully levied taxes provide an effective remedy.<sup>25</sup>

These two issues were both discussed recently in Surgicare.<sup>26</sup> The CJEU was asked to consider whether the Directive, in particular the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, precludes the mandatory application of a national administrative procedure where the revenue authorities suspect the existence of an abusive practice. It held that it did not, and that it was for the referring court to determine whether the national measures are compatible with those principles, having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

Other significant decisions in 2015 include Larentia and Minerva,<sup>27</sup> concerning the circumstances in which holding companies may deduct VAT paid on expenditure connected with the acquisition of shareholdings in subsidiaries. The CJEU held, first, that where the holding company involves itself in the management of the subsidiaries, it carries out an economic activity belonging to its general expenditure and that, therefore, the VAT paid on that expenditure must, in principle, be deducted in full. Secondly, it was said that, where the holding company involves itself in the management of only some of the subsidiaries, the VAT paid on the expenditure may only be deducted in proportion to that which is inherent to the economic activity, according to the criteria for apportioning defined by the Member States. The CJEU was also asked to consider whether the right to form a VAT group could be reserved exclusively to entities both with legal personality and linked to the controlling company of that group in a relationship of subordination. The Court held that it could not, unless these two requirements were necessary to achieve the objectives seeking to prevent abusive practices or behaviour, or to combat tax evasion or tax avoidance.

ii State aid

In recent years, the CJEU has also given judgment in a number of cases concerning fiscal state aid. Of particular note is the 2011 judgment in Gibraltar.<sup>28</sup> One of the difficult issues in the field of fiscal state aid is to determine whether a tax regime is to be considered as offering advantages selectively to a particular category of undertakings. In Gibraltar, the Court, overturning the judgment of the General Court, held that rules imposing payroll and business property occupation taxes on companies, although apparently generally applicable, nevertheless had the effect of giving offshore companies selective tax advantages contrary to the state aid rules. The Court held that, while a different tax burden resulting from the application of a 'general' tax regime was not sufficient on its own to establish selective taxation, selectivity existed where the taxation criteria adopted by a tax system were such as to characterise the recipient undertakings, by virtue of the properties that were specific to them, as a privileged category of undertakings.

A further issue is whether tax benefits aimed only at multinational companies fulfils the selectivity requirement per se. Several decisions of the Commission had previously indicated that it does.<sup>29</sup> However, the General Court has recently held in two cases that a requirement of being internationally active is not, of itself, sufficient.<sup>30</sup> There are appeals to the CJEU outstanding on these judgments, and the outcome will be of great significance to fiscal state aid aimed specifically at multinationals.

In P Oy,<sup>31</sup> the CJEU considered whether a Finnish tax regime for corporate income tax that authorised the deduction of losses of certain companies constituted unlawful state aid. It held, in accordance with well-established case law, that tax regimes that grant preferential treatment to some undertakings, and that would generally constitute state aid, may be justified by the nature or general scheme of the tax system of which it was a part. However, if the relevant tax authority had discretion over whether to authorise the deduction of losses, and the criteria upon which it based such decisions was unrelated to the tax regime, then the regime would not be justified.

In the past two years, fiscal state aid has become a key focus of the European Commission and has assumed a significant political dimension. In 2014, the European Commission announced that it had opened a number of investigations into the system of tax rulings in various Member States, including Luxembourg and the Netherlands, in relation to certain multinationals. In October 2015, the Commission concluded that rulings in Luxembourg and the Netherlands granted to Starbucks and Fiat a fiscal advantage that was not compliant with EU law. The Commission reasoned that the methods of computing their respective domestic tax liabilities, as permitted in the rulings, differed significantly from the standard regime of corporation tax and meant that Fiat and Starbucks were able to significantly lower their tax burden. This, the Commission asserts, distorts the operation of the single market. Following an in-depth state aid investigation launched in June 2014, the Commission held, in August 2016, that Ireland must recover illegal aid because it granted undue tax benefits to Apple. The tax ruling was found to be illegal under EU state aid rules because it allowed Apple to pay substantially less tax than other businesses.<sup>32</sup> The rulings endorsed a way to establish the taxable profits for two Irish incorporated companies of the Apple group (Apple Sales International and Apple Operations Europe) that did not correspond to economic reality: almost all sales profits recorded by the two companies were internally attributed to a 'head office'.<sup>33</sup>

In continuing the line of cases,<sup>34</sup> the recent decision struck new ground in two ways. First, the Commission decided that all of the profits made from sales by Apple Sales International, which owned Apple's iPhone and iPad IP outside the Americas, under a cost sharing agreement with Apple Inc in the US, and purchased Apple products from equipment manufacturers and sold Apple products to end users across Europe, should be taxed in Ireland. Second, the Commission suggested that the amount of state aid could be reduced if other countries successfully tax Apple's sales profits. Both Ireland and Apple have indicated their intention to appeal; therefore, the Commission's decision is subject to appeal to the General Court by either party. It will be interesting to see whether the Commission's attempt to play a greater role in tax cases will be upheld. The judgment for the appeals of Autogrill and Santander to the CJEU will be a clear indication as to whether the Commission's transfer pricing decisions will be upheld.

iii Direct tax and the fundamental freedoms

In the direct tax field, the CJEU continues to deliver groundbreaking decisions concerning the compatibility of national tax provisions with the fundamental Treaty freedoms. Recent cases concern various aspects of Member State tax systems, including rules on interest deduction,<sup>35</sup> controlled foreign corporations (CFCs),<sup>36</sup> dividend taxation,<sup>37</sup> loss relief<sup>38</sup> and exit taxes.<sup>39</sup>

Several general themes can be identified in the recent case law:

- a* Almost invariably, the key issue in the case law is whether national rules imposing a disadvantage on non-resident taxpayers or resident taxpayers in a cross-border situation are justified – and, therefore, rendered lawful – by the need to safeguard the balanced allocation of Member States’ taxing powers,<sup>40</sup> to prevent double use of losses,<sup>41</sup> or to combat tax avoidance and abuse.<sup>42</sup> The Court has set out guidance in a variety of contexts on the extent to which those justifications apply and, in relation to avoidance and abuse, has made a link with the VAT case law mentioned above.
- b* A second recurring issue in this area, as in the VAT case law, is the nature of the remedies that must be made available to taxpayers seeking to assert their EU law rights to provide an effective remedy and the lawfulness of procedural obstacles to the exercise of those remedies.<sup>43</sup> This issue has become increasingly important for taxpayers as tax authorities, faced with non-compliant legislation, have sought to limit claims by procedural means.

- c* A third issue that has arisen in this context – but that is of wider importance – is the extent to which taxpayers can rely on the free movement of capital provisions in Article 63 TFEU to resist fiscal restrictions on investments into and from non-EU countries.<sup>44</sup> Of particular note is the judgment in FII 2, in which the Court held that resident taxpayers could rely on Article 63 to resist discriminatory taxation of dividends received from holdings in companies in non-EU countries whether the holdings involved portfolio or direct investment.

III THE ANTI-TAX AVOIDANCE DIRECTIVE

On 21 June 2016, the Anti-Tax Avoidance Directive came into force. The Directive addresses situations where corporate groups reduce their overall tax liability by taking advantage of disparities between national tax systems. Corporate taxpayers may benefit from low tax rates or double tax reliefs, or they can ensure that categories of income remain untaxed by making them deductible in one jurisdiction while in another they are not included in the tax base.<sup>45</sup>

The Anti-Tax Avoidance Directive covers all taxpayers, including subsidiaries of companies based in third countries. However, it does not extend in a particular state to transparent entities that are not subject to tax in that state.<sup>46</sup> The Directive sets down minimum standards for national legislation in five areas:

- a* interest limitation rule to discourage artificial debt arrangements designed to minimise taxes;
- b* exit taxation rule to prevent companies from avoiding tax when relocating assets;
- c* general anti-abuse rule to counteract aggressive tax planning when other rules do not apply;
- d* CFC rule to deter profit shifting to a low or no tax country; and
- e* hybrid mismatch rules to prevent companies from exploiting national mismatches to avoid taxation.

Member States that have started implementing the Directive, or are of the view that they are already in compliance, will need to consider any differences between the EU and OECD requirements. All Member States will either need to review their existing exit tax and general anti-abuse rules or introduce appropriate new laws.

If existing tax rules do not already comply with the EU's broad template of minimum standards, the Member State is required to transpose the Directive into its national laws and regulations by 31 December 2018 to take effect no later than 1 January 2019. There is an exception for the rules on exit taxation, which do not have to be implemented until 31 December 2019 to apply from 1 January 2020. Member States that have targeted rules that are equally effective to the interest limitation rules may apply them until the OECD reaches an agreement on a minimum standard or until 1 January 2024 at the latest.

AUSTRIA

I INTRODUCTION

The Austrian tax administration has recently been under pressure to generate higher tax income and to fight tax evasion – especially in view of the global economic crisis. This has led to an increase in tax proceedings and criminal proceedings involving tax offences.

The main law in which tax proceedings are laid down is the Federal Fiscal Code (BAO). Besides general provisions regarding the relation between the tax authorities and taxpayers, detailed provisions regarding proceedings in matters of public taxes of the federal government, the regional states and the municipalities are laid down. Taxes are usually formally assessed using tax bills after the taxpayer's tax assessment has been checked by the tax authority. When a taxpayer believes the authority's bill to be illegal with respect to content, or unjustified, the taxpayer may appeal against such tax bill.

Tax procedural law was completely restructured in Austria, with effect from 1 January 2014. The remedy against notices of tax authorities is no longer an appeal, but is instead a notice of appeal. The Independent Tax Senate (on tax and customs law) was the appellate instance, and was competent for making remedy appeal decisions on matters of tax, tariffs and fiscal offences. Now, there is a general appellate instance for tax law – the Federal Tax Court – which is seated in Vienna and operates six additional branches in the Austrian provinces. Advice and representation regarding appellate procedures relating to tax law is also a broad field of activity for advisers. According to statistics published by the Federal Tax Court, 13,291 appeals against tax bills were filed in 2015. The current average period for the settlement of appeals before the Federal Tax Court is approximately 20 months. The taxpayer has the right to appeal against decisions of the Federal Tax Court before the Administrative Supreme Court or the Constitutional Supreme Court, but an appeal before the Administrative Supreme Court is only admissible if the Federal Tax Court explicitly mentions this in its judgment. If the Federal Tax Court does not grant leave for appeal

(e.g., because no legal issue of substantial importance needs to be clarified), the only way is through an extraordinary appeal before the Administrative Supreme Court, which is only feasible under particular conditions. Only 2.11 per cent were filed with the Administrative Supreme Court or the Constitutional Supreme Court in 2015. An average of 1.26 per cent of all finished appellate proceedings judgments of the Federal Tax Court are set aside by the Constitutional Supreme Court or the Administrative Supreme Court by reason of unlawfulness or procedural irregularity.

During proceedings on appeal, it is also possible to amicably settle the dispute between the taxpayer and the tax authority. For this purpose the parties to the proceedings are summoned to appear, either officially or based on a suggestion, at a discussion meeting in which the facts as well as the legal situation and the settlement of the legal dispute are tried. The costs of appellate procedures depend on the individual case. The successfully appealing party has no right to claim for payment of its costs for the procedure. Hence, advisory costs and costs of representation are usually borne by each party.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

i Cause of action of tax proceedings and tax disputes

In Austria, taxes are basically assessed and invoiced in the form of tax notices. A notice is an individual, sovereign, external administrative act issued by the tax authority. These tax notices are issued in writing and must meet certain requirements regarding content: for example, they must be duly reasoned and the main facts that the decision is based on must be clearly mentioned. If a taxpayer does not agree with the legal view and the notice's content, he or she may initiate an appellate procedure by filing an appeal. If a taxpayer does nothing within the legal time for appeal of one month (which may, however, be extended upon application), the tax notice becomes legally effective and binding.

Tax audits or other official acts may also lead to an ex post reopening of closed proceedings. Against such decisions to resume, and following possibly amended tax bills, appeals can be made.

ii Appellate procedures before the Federal Tax Court as appellate instance

Appeals can be made against notices of the tax authority within one month of delivery of the notice. In addition to information regarding the name of the notice appealed against, such appeal should include the issues of appeal and information to which the amendments apply. Furthermore, the reasons for notice of appeal must be set out.

Provided that the appeal is admissible, timely and free from fault regarding form and content, the tax authority that issued the tax notice is competent to use the content to make a preliminary decision on the appeal. The Federal Tax Court only decides immediately in a few exceptional cases. The taxpayer may file an application for submission with the Federal Tax Court against the preliminary decision on the appeal of the authority that issued the notice. As a consequence, the preliminary decision on the appeal ceases to be effective and the appeal is directly submitted to the Federal Tax Court for decision.

iii Appellate procedures before the Administrative Supreme Court

If a taxpayer also fails to submit to the judgment and legal opinion of the Federal Tax Court, another remedy and appellate proceedings before the Administrative Supreme Court may be initiated. This appeal needs to be filed within six weeks of the judgment of the Federal Tax Court.

There are two types of appeal: regular and extraordinary appeals. A regular appeal must be admitted by the Federal Tax Court, and must be included in the judgment of the Federal Tax Court. A regular appeal is admissible if:

- a* the legal question to be answered is of fundamental importance;
- b* the judgment derives from the adjudication of the Administrative Supreme Court;
- c* an adjudication of the Administrative Supreme Court is missing; or
- d* the legal question at issue has not been answered consistently in the adjudication of the Administrative Supreme Court.

If the Federal Tax Court does not admit such a regular appeal, the remedy of extraordinary appeal may be made against the judgment of the Federal Tax Court. In the case of an extraordinary appeal, the taxpayer must additionally state why he or she considers the appeal admissible contrary to the judgment of the Federal Tax Court.

iv Appellate procedure before the Constitutional Supreme Court

An appeal against a judgment of the Federal Tax Court may also be filed by reason of the violation of basic rights with the Constitutional Supreme Court. In connection with a respective appeal, the taxpayer must state that he or she feels violated in his or her rights granted by constitutional law, or as a consequence of an illegal regulation, an unconstitutional law or state treaty being applied by the judgment of the Federal Tax Court.

v Legal protection regarding international double taxation

Austria aims to avoid double taxation in the area of income tax by concluding tax treaties. As of 26 May 2015, Austria had concluded such double taxation conventions, often based on the OECD Model Convention, with about 101 countries.

In cases where no tax treaty applies (e.g., because no tax treaty exists or certain taxes are not included), national measures apply under certain conditions where Austria unilaterally tries to avoid double taxation. The national legal basis for such unilateral measures can be found in Section 48 of the BAO. According to this provision, the Federal Ministry of Finance may order to exclude, in whole or in part, certain taxable items from taxation, or to set off, in whole or in part, foreign taxes. The decision of the Federal Ministry of Finance is a discretionary decision, which allows the Ministry to avoid double taxation both by individual setting and by general regulations.

On the basis of this provision, the Federal Ministry of Finance has issued several regulations that concretise the provision of Section 48 of the BAO. One example of such regulation is VO BGBl II 2002/474, which takes steps to avoid double taxation in relation to income tax and corporate income tax if no double tax treaty exists with the country in question.

Section 48 of the BAO also allows the Federal Ministry of Finance an individual settlement of applications. There are also, of course, EU law provisions to be observed in which double taxation applies. In addition to Section 48 of the BAO, there are other provisions in which unilateral national measures for the avoidance of double taxation are laid down. For example, the Double Taxation Tax Act 2010 allows the Federal Ministry of Finance to avoid double taxation by general regulations for areas or countries with no legal subjectivity in relation to international humanitarian law (e.g., Palestine).

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

As from 1 January 2014, legal protection is regulated by an administrative jurisdiction on two levels. The first level is the Federal Fiscal Court and the second level the Higher Administrative Court. A possibility to file a complaint with the Constitutional Court continues to be available. The following authorities or courts may be relevant for tax purposes.

i Tax offices

Tax offices are competent for the collection of taxes, and are therefore the central body for most tax issues. Further competences are, for example, defined in the Act Governing the Employment of Foreign Nationals and the Gambling Act. In addition to the tax offices having general competence, there are also tax offices with a special scope of competence in Austria, for example, regarding particular subject matter, or locally for certain types of taxes or for certain taxpayers.

ii Federal Tax Court

The Federal Tax Court as appellate instance decides appeals against notices issued by tax authorities, most importantly tax offices. There are two types of decisions taken by the Federal Tax Court: decisions on the merits or rulings (i.e., decisions on procedural aspects of law). Basically, decisions are taken by judges sitting alone who are independent and who cannot be transferred or removed. Upon the taxpayer's application a senate, consisting of four members, can also rule on appeals from notices.

iii Public law courts

The Administrative Supreme Court and the Constitutional Supreme Court are the public law courts in Austria. These courts constitute the final national instance in tax law.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

i General

It is important to keep in mind that there are not only tax law provisions to be observed, but that fiscal misconduct may also have criminal law implications. Contraventions in the field of applicability of taxes laid down in federal laws and directly applicable EU laws are dealt with in the Fiscal Offences Act. Furthermore, some special laws also contain penal provisions, and regularly refer to the provisions of the Fiscal Offences Act.

The Fiscal Offences Act consists of two parts: the substantive fiscal offences law and criminal proceedings involving fiscal offences. Criminal proceedings involving fiscal offences can be subdivided further into criminal proceedings before a fiscal authority and criminal proceedings before a court. Intentional evasion of taxes is generally only punishable by court if the amount of taxes evaded exceeds €100,000. Intentional customs offences are only punishable by court if the customs duty for the goods to pay duty on exceeds €50,000.

Criminal proceedings before a fiscal authority are the responsibility of the tax offices as the functional authority competent for fiscal offences, and the collection of taxes that are evaded, unpaid or not assessed in a timely fashion. If the amount of taxes evaded is higher than €33,000, the ruling of the authority competent for fiscal offences is taken by a senate consisting of three members. Judicial criminal proceedings involving fiscal offences are decided before regular criminal courts.

ii Types of fiscal penalty

The Fiscal Offences Act defines various types of offences, and includes not only fiscal offences but also customs offences. The most important offences in practice are as follows.

Tax evasion

A person who intentionally evades taxes whereby duties of notification, disclosure or truthfulness are breached commits the offence of tax evasion. Tax evasion is also effected by knowingly omitting a VAT assessment subject to the duty to preliminarily assess VAT. The degree of penalty for committing intentional tax evasion is up to twice the amount evaded. Where tax is evaded as a business or as a group, higher penalties are threatened.

Tax fraud

The legislature has created a new fact, tax fraud, in the Fiscal Offences Act as of 1 January 2011. Massive penalties (imprisonment) for committing particular fiscal offences are provided for in the Act.

There is a tax fraud if, on one hand, one of the basic facts of tax evasion objectively and subjectively exists, and, on the other, this offence was committed by committing one of the necessary acts of fraud. Acts of fraud are listed in Section 39 of the Fiscal Offences Act as follows: use of incorrect or falsified documents, data or evidence; use of fictitious transactions or fictitious acts; and the assessment of preliminary taxes paid that are not based on delivery or other services to obtain unjustified tax credits.

Hence, tax fraud ties in with the classic acts of fraud defined in the general Criminal Code, which become manifest in the production of incorrect or falsified documents or evidence. In contrast with basic crimes, tax fraud is punished mainly with imprisonment. The threat of punishment consists of three levels to account for the penalty and the seriousness of the offence. Where taxes between €100,000 and up to €250,000 are evaded, a sentence of one to three years' imprisonment and fine of up to €2.5 million is likely. If the amount of taxes evaded is between €250,001 and €500,000, the minimum term of imprisonment is six months up to a maximum term of five years and a fine of up to €5 million. If the amount of taxes evaded is more than €500,000, imprisonment of between one and 10 years and a fine of up to four times the amount evaded is likely.

Negligent evasion of taxes

A person who carelessly circumvents taxes commits the offence of negligent evasion of taxes. Negligence is disregarding the due diligence. In contrast with an intentional act, a person who acts negligently seeks no 'success' (e.g., tax evasion). The degree of penalty for negligent evasion of taxes is set up to a maximum fine of the total tax evaded.

Financial administrative offence

Financial administrative offences, which are also laid down in the Fiscal Offences Act, constitute a catchall clause. Financial administrative offences are, however, only liable to punishment if intentionally and not negligently committed. The burden of proof of whether such offence was committed intentionally lies with the fiscal offence prosecution authority. A financial administrative offence is, for example, an intentional late payment of self-assessed taxes. Self-assessed taxes are VAT, tax on income from employment, employer's contribution to the Family Burden Equalisation Fund and surcharge to the employer's contribution, capital gains tax and EU withholding tax. Non-payment from the fifth day following the due date of the tax is punishable. The fine is up to 50 per cent of the amount not paid.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

In Austria, the official tax claim comes into existence as soon as the fact to which the tax duty is bound by law is fulfilled. For example, when real property is bought in Austria, the liability to pay real estate transfer tax comes into existence upon execution of the purchase contract.

However, if a tax credit originated from the payment of taxes, this is to be refunded either upon the taxpayer's application or ex officio by the tax authority. 'Tax credit' means that the total amount of tax credits exceeds the total of taxes charged on the tax account.

Particularly in connection with capital gains tax and tax on income from employment, from time to time a taxpayer's taxes are withheld and paid in error without the taxpayer's contribution. In this case, a taxpayer may file an application for a refund with the competent tax office. The application may be filed until the end of the fifth calendar year following the year the taxes were withheld.

ii Facilities of payment

When taxpayers are in economic distress, they may apply for the payment of their tax sums to be made easier. Possibilities for this include deferment of tax or payment by instalments.

The granting of easier terms of payment is, however, subject to several conditions, because in addition to the taxpayer's application, the taxpayer must be in economic distress, and the collection of taxes must not be endangered by granting such facilitated payment. Furthermore, this is only possible for taxes not yet paid.

iii Suspension of tax collection

Suspending tax collection serves the factual efficiency of legal protection. This means that the complainant should not be burdened with the consequences of a potentially illegal decision issued by the authorities prior to the final decision regarding the remedies by the court of appeal. The complainant must apply for a suspension of tax collection, and the application may be filed between the filing of the complaint and the decision regarding such complaint. Collection of tax is to be suspended if the amount of such tax directly or indirectly depends on the clarification of a complaint. The suspension will only be granted up to an amount by which the relevant tax burden would be reduced in the event of the complaining party being successful with its remedy. The exact amount of the amount in dispute in an application for suspension is therefore of decisive importance. Basically, suspension is to be chosen before deferment. If, for example, both suspension and deferment are granted, payment is suspended until the period of suspension expires or is withdrawn.

iv Remitting taxes

In Austria, tax liabilities may also be remitted in whole or in part under certain conditions. However, this is only possible if the taxpayer files the necessary application with the tax authority and if the collection of such tax was unfair according to the facts of the case. There is a differentiation made between personal and factual inequality.

Whether personal inequality exists results from the taxpayer's economic situation. Collection measures that jeopardise livelihoods in particular are considered unequal by the judicature. Therefore, personal inequality usually exists if the collection of the relevant tax would put the taxpayer or his or her family in financial distress. Factual inequality of tax collection exists if the collection of tax in an individual case produces a result that was apparently not intended by the legislature, and if this led to an extraordinary burden and to an atypical interference with property. It is, therefore, to be used in cases in which tax liability accrues from exceptional facts and in which the collection of tax leads to a disproportionate financial burden of the taxpayer.

v Claimants

Taxpayers are every person that the tax authority contacts or may contact with respect to tax liability. Usually, the taxable person is also the receiver of the tax bill. A taxable person may also be somebody who is not the receiver of the tax bill: for example, the tax on income from employment where the employee is the taxpayer but the employer is liable to pay the taxes and is the primary contact.

Taxpayers may be individuals as well as legal entities. They are recognised as parties both in fiscal proceedings of first instance and in appellate proceedings; hence, they have all rights of a party to proceedings. Fiscal obligations of a partnership are to be fulfilled by the partnership's managing directors and their partners. If several persons come into consideration they have to name a joint authorised person to the tax authority. As an alternative, the authority may appoint a partner as a representative authorised to represent all.

VI COSTS

i Proceedings before the Federal Tax Court

In tax proceedings, as well as in proceedings on appeal before the Federal Tax Court, the costs of the proceedings are usually borne by the parties. In many cases there are hearings of witnesses and expert opinions. These witnesses and experts have the right to reimbursement of costs, which is usually paid by the tax authority. Where evidence incurs unreasonably high costs, the tax authority is only obliged to take such evidence if the costs incurred are fully paid by the taxpayer.

ii Appellate procedure before the Administrative Supreme Court and the Constitutional Supreme Court

Appeals to the courts of public law are subject to a fee of €240. The other costs of the proceedings are, to a large extent, fixed rates. If a case is won the costs are reimbursed by lump-sum payment.

iii Criminal proceedings involving fiscal offences

If a taxpayer is convicted of an illegal act in criminal proceedings involving fiscal offences, he or she has to bear the following costs.

First, the taxpayer must pay a lump-sum contribution to the costs in an amount of 10 per cent of the fine imposed. However, if imprisonment was sanctioned, the taxpayer must pay €5 per day of imprisonment. The lump-sum payment is, however, rather low in Austria, since it is limited to €500. The lump-sum payment is fixed in the sentence.

Secondly, the taxpayer has to bear the costs for cash expenses of the fiscal authority and for the taking of evidence as well as other costs of the proceedings: for example, travel expenses of officers, witnesses or experts. The costs imposed become payable one month after the judgment becomes final. The tax authority of first instance is competent for the collection of these costs. Furthermore, the taxpayer must bear the costs of execution of the sentence; the costs of execution of the imprisonment are to be fixed by the court responsible for the execution of the sentence after the imprisonment is over.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

i General

Arbitration and other types of settlement of disputes, for example mediation, are only of very limited importance in Austrian tax law. Mediation is often discussed in the literature, but has not yet been established in practice. This is also based on the fact that the Austrian tax administration must closely adhere to the laws.

ii Advance ruling

Since 1 January 2011, it has been possible to obtain binding advance information from tax authorities in the form of an information notice (an advance ruling; Section 118 of the BAO). The introduction of such binding legal information will increase the reliability of planning for companies in the following areas, and further strengthen Austria as a location for business: transfer prices; group taxation; and restructuring measures.

According to the legislature, it is possible for the taxpayer to be certain about the fiscal assessment of the tax authority before the fact questioned is even realised. This minimises tax law-related risks of the respective undertaking.

Binding effect

The main advantage of this regulation is the binding effect of the advance ruling. The binding effect with respect to the fiscal assessment made in a notice not only exists for the tax authority that issues the notice, but also for a tax authority that becomes competent after a transfer of competence. An advanced ruling that is not issued by a competent tax office nevertheless still has a binding effect. The advanced ruling can be taken as a basis for the levying of taxes. This is, of course, provided that the realised facts do not or only slightly deviate from the facts that the assessment of the tax authority was based on.

Content

The advanced ruling, being a written notice, must meet the general requirements of the BAO. Section 118 Paragraph 6 of the BAO further defines the necessary content that must be included. This is in concreto:

- a* the facts that the fiscal assessment is based on;
- b* the tax assessment;
- c* the tax rules the assessment is based on;
- d* the taxes or findings and the periods of time for which the advanced ruling shall apply; and
- e* the extent of the applicant's reporting obligations.

The advanced ruling can also assess the facts to be assessed in deviation from the legal view of the applicant. This is not a partial dismissal of the application. The application demands that the stated facts be assessed with respect to tax law, but not that the legal view expressed in the application needs to be confirmed.

Costs

Pursuant to Section 118 Paragraphs 10 and 11 of the BAO, the applicant has to pay an administrative fee for the processing of the application. The information necessary for the calculation of the fee should already to be included in the application for issuance of an advanced ruling.

The amount of such administrative fee depends on whether the applicant has to set up a consolidated financial statement. In these cases, the administrative fee is €20,000. If there is no group structure, the administrative fee depends on the sales revenue. For the calculation of the administrative fee, the 12 months prior to the last balance sheet date of the applicant are decisive.

Costs	Requirements
€500	If the application is rejected If an application for remedy of defects is not provided, not timely or insufficiently met If the application is withdrawn before processing
€1,500	Sales up to €400,000
€3,000	Sales of between €400,001 and €700,000
€5,000	Sales of between €700,001 and €9,680,000
€10,000	Sales of between €9,680,001 and €38,500,000
€20,000	Sales from €38,500,001 If one of the applicants is part of a group of companies within the meaning of the Austrian Commercial Code that is subject to drawing up a consolidated financial statement pursuant to Section 224 in connection with Section 246 of the Austrian Commercial Code

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Austrian legislature provides for a central rule in tax law – Section 22 of the BAO – by which tax circumvention shall be prevented. Pursuant to Section 22 of the BAO, it is not possible to circumvent or prevent tax liability by misusing the forms and interpretation of civil law. This means that a taxpayer may basically choose freely between the forms and interpretation of civil law, yet only to the extent that such interpretation is not unusual or inappropriate with respect to the economic success being aimed at, and as long as this is not solely based on the intention to avoid taxes.

The principle of economic approach is important in this context. This means that the true economic content and not the outer appearance of facts is decisive (substance over form). According to Supreme Court case law, it should be assessed whether the chosen procedure remains reasonable if the tax-saving effect was left out or whether such procedure would become completely incomprehensible without reducing taxes. A fraudulent or abusive referral to EU law is also not admissible, according to the European Court of Justice. If there is misuse, the consequences in terms of tax law that are usually applicable are omitted; the taxes are to be collected as if a reasonable legal design was chosen.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

i General

In Austria, taxes from income and property are included in double taxation treaties. These taxes not only include income tax and corporate income tax, but also capital gains tax and tax on land and buildings, as well as local taxes in part. Tax treaties that are concluded with Austria do not prevent double taxation of VAT.

ii VAT

With respect to VAT, there is a European system of VAT that is based on the principle that taxes are directly attributed to the state where the place of final consumption of a good or service lies. The result for Austrian VAT is that only sales realised in Austria are subject to Austrian VAT. Hence, foreign sales revenues are not taxable in Austria.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

i Base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS)

In recent years, activities of international relevance have increasingly become the focus of tax audits performed by tax authorities in Austria. The main reason for this is the OECD report regarding BEPS published in 2013. Austria has already implemented some regulations regarding the meaning of 'BEPS' into national law (e.g., Section 10, Paragraph 7 of the Austrian Corporate Income Tax Act (KStG) regarding the tax duty of hybrid shares in profits that can be deducted from profits distributed from foreign companies; Section 12, Paragraph 1, Item 9 KStG regarding the ban on interest deduction for group internal participation acquisitions; and Section 12, Paragraph 1, Item 10 KStG regarding the ban on the deductibility of interest and royalty payments to low-taxed affiliates). The Austrian Transfer Pricing Documentation Act was officially published on 1 August 2016. Therewith, the three-tiered standardised approach to transfer pricing documentation, as proposed by the OECD, is obligatory in Austria. Depending on their total revenue, Austrian resident entities have to generate a master file and a local file (if the total revenue exceeds €50 million) or country-by-country reporting (if the total consolidated group revenue equals at least €750 million). Furthermore, an Austrian entity is also obliged to provide the master file if a related foreign entity has to create a master file under the applicable regulations of another state. The country-by-country reporting has to be provided to the tax authorities within 12 months after the last day of the specific fiscal year, whereas the tax authorities may request the master file and local file within 30 days after the corporate income tax return of the company was filed. According to Section 49b of the Fiscal Penal Act, intentional or grossly negligent misstatements in the country-by-country report may trigger a penalty of up to €50,000. The same applies if the country-by-country report is not transmitted on time.

ii Limitation of banking secrecy

With the Bank Account Register Act, the Austrian Federal Ministry of Finance was empowered to create a federal register of bank accounts and depositories containing the bank account number and personal data of account holders. Banking secrecy was limited by means of the banking package, so that federal tax authorities have access to bank data if they have ‘concerns’ regarding the accuracy of tax returns. Access is also granted to bank data of other persons (e.g., suppliers or customers) if there is a reasonable assumption that such access is of relevance to tax proceedings. The tax authorities have been able to receive such information since October 2016.

iii Cash register duty

According to the newly introduced cash register duty, the cash turnover of an undertaking that earns at least €15,000 and more than €7,500 in cash must be fitted with an electronic cash register since January 2016. To protect these cash registers against manipulation, the cash registers must be fitted with an appropriate security installation. Associated with this is the duty to issue receipts. If the cash register duty and the duty to issue receipts are not complied with, this will lead to consequences in the way that a financial offence is committed, and fines of up to €5,000 may be imposed.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

On one hand, a main step to reach the above-mentioned BEPS goals is a substantially increased number of tax audits of international companies and of international facts. Relating thereto, transfer prices will more often be focused on in tax audits. On the other hand, measures such as the limitation of banking secrecy or the cash register duty will in general lead to an increasing number of findings at tax audits. All these measures will, in turn, contribute to an increasing number of tax procedures and fiscal offences procedures in the future. The aggressive tax planning of multinational companies has been the focus of public interest, particularly due to the BEPS report. Thus, it can be assumed that the Austrian legislature will continue to tighten regulations concerning those legal facts, and that this will be accompanied by other measures to prevent tax fraud and tax circumvention.

BELGIUM

I INTRODUCTION

Belgian tax procedures vary slightly depending on the type of tax. However, a common feature of Belgian tax procedures is that there is no fee or cost due to the tax authorities or to the courts.<sup>2</sup> The taxpayer may defend itself before the tax authorities and the courts, and thereby avoid paying fees to counsel.

Tax procedures may be slow. The tax authorities may revisit taxpayers' files after several years, administrative appeals may take several months and the courts are under-resourced. Nevertheless, most misunderstandings are swiftly settled at the stage of an administrative procedure organised as a series of open discussions where the taxpayer has access to the tax authorities' files.

Special services have been organised within the tax authorities to serve as intermediaries between taxpayers and the services in charge of assessing taxes. The Ruling Commission was created to prevent disputes, while the Tax Conciliation Service was created to assist taxpayers in tax disputes.

This chapter focuses on income tax disputes and the procedure organised by the federal legislation.<sup>3</sup>

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

i Audit of the taxpayer's situation

Most taxes are assessed on the basis of tax returns filed by taxpayers.<sup>4</sup> Tax disputes most often commence with a review of tax returns.

The tax authorities are allowed to adjust a taxpayer's income on the basis of any means of evidence, excluding oath (Article 340 of the Income Tax Code 1992 (CIR1992)).<sup>5</sup> They may investigate the taxpayer's situation for a period of three years from the beginning of the assessment year.<sup>6</sup> This period may be extended for an additional four years, provided that the authorities first notify the taxpayer in writing about any signs of a wilful attempt to defeat or evade tax related to the period under examination (Article 333 CIR1992). The taxpayer must also be notified when the authorities request information from other persons.<sup>7</sup> The consultation of databanks is not an investigation.<sup>8</sup> Signs of fraud are sufficient; the authorities do not need to demonstrate the wilful attempt to defeat or evade tax at the time of this notification.<sup>9</sup>

The authorities are allowed to further investigate if they receive information from a foreign country bound by an exchange of information agreement for the purposes of establishing that the taxpayer omitted to report income that should have been reported within the five-year period before the year during which the information from the foreign country has been made available to them (Article 333/2 CIR1992).<sup>10</sup>

If a taxpayer files a complaint against a tax bill, the tax authorities may also conduct further investigations for the purposes of deciding on the taxpayer's grievances (Article 374 CIR1992). Investigations may thus be conducted long after the seven-year period during which taxpayers must keep their books (Article 315 CIR1992 and the Act of 8 June 2008).

The tax authorities may request that the taxpayer show them any document necessary to determine its tax liability (Article 315e CIR1992). The tax authorities may require the taxpayer to supply information within one month, or may allow a time extension if necessary (Article 316 CIR1992). Taxpayers who keep data in a computerised system must allow the 4 Income tax returns must be filed within the six-month period following the closing of the relevant period. The calendar year is the relevant period for determining liability for individual tax. The fiscal year to which the annual financial statements of companies and other separate legal entities relate corresponds to the period over which their liability to corporate tax or to not-for-profit organisation tax is determined.

5 The minutes of a VAT audit may be used to make presumptions for income tax purposes (see Cass, 21 June 2012).

6 The assessment year is the year during which the tax situation of the taxpayer is determined. This is the current calendar year with respect to withholding taxes; the year following the relevant period with respect to individual tax; and the year during which the fiscal year ends if it ends before 31 December, or the year thereafter if the fiscal year ends on 31 December.

10 Seven years in the case of a wilful attempt to defeat or evade tax.

tax authorities to access such information in the form that they require. The tax authorities may also access the premises where the taxpayer conducts a business during business hours (Article 319 CIR1992).

The tax authorities are allowed to keep the taxpayer's books and documents that they deem necessary to determine the amount of taxable income. They are not allowed to take books that are not closed (Article 315-ter CIR1992).

Information obtained on the occasion of the audit of a taxpayer may be used for the purposes of taxing other taxpayers (Article 317 CIR1992).<sup>11</sup> The tax authorities may also request from any taxpayer information deemed necessary to determine the tax liability of any other taxpayer (Article 322 CIR1992). They may require bulk information on transactions of persons and groups of persons directly or indirectly involved in such transactions (Article 323 CIR1992).

The tax authorities may also request information from a bank with the purpose of taxing targeted customers if they suspect fraud or intend to impose a tax on the basis of evidence of wealth, unless the taxpayer (who must be informed of the intent to proceed with bank investigations) provides the requested information within one month. For the purposes of satisfying a request from another country, the tax authorities may investigate banks' files without giving prior notification to the taxpayer if the other country explicitly requests not to inform the taxpayer or if the other country demonstrates that it has already notified the taxpayer (Article 333/1 CIR1992).

In criminal matters, the Supreme Court has held that pieces of evidence obtained irregularly cannot be set aside unless the irregularity affects the reliability of the evidence or the right to a fair trial, or if compelling formalities have been disregarded.<sup>12</sup> The Act of 24 October 2013 has embedded this dictum. The Supreme Court has expanded its dictum to pieces of evidence obtained by the tax authorities and used to establish a tax.<sup>13</sup>

ii Limitations on assessment

When the taxpayer files an accurate tax return in a timely manner, the tax must be assessed before 30 June of the year following the assessment year or six months after the filing of the tax return, whichever is later (Article 353 CIR1992).

However, if the taxpayer fails to file its return in a timely manner, or the tax authorities determine that the amount of tax due is higher than the amount resulting from the items reported in the return, the tax may be assessed within three years of the beginning of the assessment year (Article 354 CIR1992).<sup>14</sup> This three-year limitation period is extended for a

11 As an exception to this rule, information collected in a bank's books on the occasion of that bank's tax situation being examined must not be used to tax that bank's customers, unless a fraud mechanism is detected (Article 318 CIR1992).

13 Cass 22 May 2015.

14 A tax that is computed on the basis of the tax return must be assessed according to Article 353 CIR1992 even if the authorities later determine a deficiency within the time limit of Article 354 CIR1992 (Cass, 17 November 2016).

further four years in cases of wilful attempt to defeat or evade tax (Article 354 CIR1992). If the authorities do not need to further investigate during the additional four-year period, they are not required to notify the taxpayer signs of fraud.<sup>15,16</sup>

The tax may be assessed within the seven-year period even if the authorities did not first make use of the three-year period under Article 354 CIR1992 in the absence of a timely tax return.<sup>17</sup>

The tax may be assessed beyond these limitations in the following circumstances (Article 358 CIR1992):

- a* withholding tax on moveable property income and PAYE unpaid during the five preceding years may be assessed during the year following the statement of the infringement;<sup>18</sup>
- b* if it appears from information received from a foreign country bound by an agreement on the exchange of information or from further investigation led by the Belgian authorities that items of income have not been reported when they should have been reported during one of the five years (or seven years in the case of fraud) preceding the year during which the information passed on by the foreign authorities is received by the Belgian authorities, the tax on such income may be assessed during a period of 24 months following the exchange of information;
- c* if a case brought before a court shows that items of income should have been reported within the five years before the year of the commencement of the proceedings, the tax may be assessed on such income during the 12 months after a court decision on the case has become final;<sup>19</sup> and
- d* when evidence shows that income should have been reported during the five years before the year during which the evidence became known to the tax authorities, the tax on that income may still be assessed during the 12 months following the time that the authorities obtained the information.

There is no time limit for adjusting the value of understated assets or overstated liabilities: they are deemed to be income of the year under examination unless the taxpayer demonstrates that they have already been taken into account to determine its tax situation (Article 361 CIR1992).<sup>20</sup>

15 Cass, 12 February 2016.

16 If a taxpayer liable for corporate tax is dissolved, and its directors, managers or liquidators do not reserve the moneys to satisfy the Treasury, they may be sued for five years after the publication of the closing of the liquidation.

17 Cass, 17 November 2016.

18 The time extension is not subject to investigations with third persons (Cass, 17 June 2016).

19 The Supreme Court held that the same provision allowed the tax authorities to tax, during the additional 12-month period, income that has not been reported after the commencement of the proceeding (Cass, 17 October 2013).

20 The principle that items of income earned during a given period must be taxed separately with the other income of the same period is set aside by Article 361 CIR 1992 (Const Court, 124/2011, 7 July 2011).

The tax authorities may challenge the amount of deductible previous losses when they are used to offset taxable income. This means that they can challenge the profits and burdens of previous years that resulted in the losses carried over, regardless of the year to which they relate.<sup>21</sup>

If the tax director invalidates a tax bill further to a complaint filed by the taxpayer (see below) on grounds other than the statute of limitations, the tax authorities may assess an alternative tax computed on the same items as those on which the invalid tax had been computed within the three-month period after the tax director's decision becomes final (Article 355 CIR1992).

If the taxpayer is convicted of tax fraud by a criminal court, the tax authorities cannot claim damages amounting to the tax evaded if the statute of limitations under the tax legislation has ended. The tax authorities cannot substitute a civil demand relying on the outcome of a criminal proceeding for a timely assessment.<sup>22</sup> The cause of a tax debt is not the wrongful behaviour of the taxpayer but the taxable transaction.<sup>23</sup>

iii Debates prior to assessment

If the tax authorities intend to adjust a taxpayer's tax liability, they must send it a notice of deficiency (Articles 346 and 351 CIR1992). The notice of deficiency, which is an invitation to discussion, must mention all the elements on which the intended adjustment is based. No tax can be imposed on elements other than those in the notice.<sup>24</sup>

The taxpayer is allowed one month to answer the notice of deficiency (this is not applicable in respect of withholding tax or if the rights of the Treasury are jeopardised). The one-month period starts running from the third working day following the sending of the notice of deficiency. The tax cannot be assessed before the end of this one-month period.

Before assessing the tax, the tax authorities must reply to the arguments of the taxpayer (notification of assessment) (Articles 346 and 352-bis CIR1992). Although the assessment must be justified by elements mentioned in the notice of deficiency, the tax authorities may still change their legal analysis of the same elements. They may also use the same motives in the notification of assessment as in the notice of deficiency if the taxpayer does not submit new arguments.<sup>25</sup>

Despite the taxpayer's disagreement, the tax may be assessed and established as a debt.<sup>26</sup>

21 Cass, 12 September 1991.

23 Cass, 2 March 2016.

24 There is no threshold amount or de minimis rule. The tax authorities may adjust the taxpayer's tax situation even if no supplement of tax is at stake for the period under examination (e.g., adjustment of operating losses or excess dividends-received deduction available for carry-forward).

25 See Cass, 21 November 2013.

26 See Cass, 18 October 2012.

iv Tax complaints

The taxpayer may bring a complaint against a tax bill before the tax director. The complaint is an administrative appeal against the tax, and is a prerequisite before bringing the dispute before a court (Article 1385-undecies of the Judicial Code).

The complaint must be filed within six months and three working days of the tax bill being sent (Article 371 CIR1992).

If the complaint is filed in a timely manner, the collection of the contested amount of tax is restricted for the period during which the proceeding is pending (Article 410 CIR1992). Despite the fact that the taxpayer may retain the payment of the contested tax, it will owe interest on the amount if it is unsuccessful. If the taxpayer pays the tax assessed (or if the authorities use a tax refund to offset the contested tax), interest will be paid to it if it wins the case (Article 418 CIR1992). The legal annual interest rate in tax matters is 7 per cent (Act of 5 May 1865 on interest-bearing loans).

Before making a decision, the tax director, if so requested in the complaint, must invite the taxpayer to argue orally the points therein, and to consult the tax authorities' file. The tax director is expected to make his or her decision within six months of the filing of the complaint, or nine months in the absence of a tax return filed in a timely manner or in assimilated circumstances. Usually, the tax director takes much longer than six months to review a file; he or she may even take several years. In the absence of a decision after this six or nine-month period, the taxpayer may bring its case before a court (Article 1385-undecies of the Judicial Code). In the absence of a decision six months after the filing of the complaint, interest stops running on the disputed tax debt until the case is brought before a court (Article 414 CIR1992).

The tax director cannot impose additional tax or use relief to offset any new deficiency that he or she may find (Article 375 CIR1992). Nevertheless, the tax director's interpretation of the facts presented by the tax inspector may support the assessment, provided that he or she does not make the taxpayer's situation worse. However, the fact that a taxpayer has filed a complaint does not hamper the tax authorities from further investigating the taxpayer's situation and adjusting the tax liability within the time limits mentioned above (see Section II.ii, supra).

A complaint against tax assessed on the basis of contested elements amounts to a complaint against any tax assessed on the basis of the same elements (Article 367 CIR1992). If the complaint relates to the deduction of expenses made during a given taxable period, and such expenses cannot be fully deducted from the profit of that taxable period, the complaint also affects the taxes relating to subsequent periods during which the excess of these expenses have been deducted.<sup>27</sup>

An additional tax assessed after an adjustment of the taxable basis (understated or hidden items of income) is never considered as assessed on the same elements as those taken into account when determining the initial tax bill. If the taxpayer is time-barred to complain against the initial tax bill, it cannot rely on a complaint against the additional tax bill to obtain the invalidation of the initial one. However, it may criticise elements taken into account when computing the initial tax bill to obtain the rescission of the additional tax bill.<sup>28</sup>

27 Cass, 21 September 2012.

28 Cass, 11 May 1965.

If the tax authorities base an additional tax for an assessment year on elements that have already been taxed in another assessment year, the taxpayer may file a complaint against the previous tax bill based on the same elements within three months and three working days of the sending of the additional tax bill (Article 373 CIR1992).

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Appeal before the tribunal

If the taxpayer is not satisfied with the tax director's decision, it may file an appeal before the court of first instance (the tribunal) within three months and three days after the decision has been sent. The director's decision is suspended during the appeal procedure and the period during which the appeal can be lodged (Article 300 CIR1992).

The director's decision is irrevocable if the taxpayer does not file a petition against it.<sup>29</sup> If the tax director fails to render his or her decision within six months of the filing of the complaint (nine months in the absence of a tax return filed in a timely manner or assimilated circumstances), the taxpayer may bring its case before the tribunal.

If the director annuls or rescinds the tax for any reason, a petition aiming at a revision of the motives for the annulment or rescission is not admissible; the only purpose of a petition is the annulment or rescission of the tax.<sup>30</sup>

Tax cases are handled by independent judges specialising in tax matters. Ordinarily, tax cases are submitted to a chamber of one judge.<sup>31</sup> Only in very specific circumstances will a case call for a chamber of three judges.

A tax appeal is not admitted if the administrative procedure has not been exhausted when such a procedure is organised by law.<sup>32</sup> When the law does not provide for any preliminary administrative review, the taxpayer may submit its case directly to the tribunal. For example, if the taxpayer fears the threat of an illegal assessment, it may protest to the tribunal, and request urgent and preliminary measures to avoid further damage.

In general, the Treasury is represented by the tax director who decided on the complaint, or his or her delegate. In specific circumstances, the Treasury appoints attorneys-at-law, which may mean additional costs for the unsuccessful taxpayer (see Section VI, infra).

The parties usually submit a schedule to the court stating the date on which they will file their briefs of arguments, and request a date for the oral submissions. Because the tax courts are under-resourced, hearings are severely delayed.

The ordinary rules allow the taxpayer to present new claims in its brief of arguments, provided that they are supported by the facts stated in the initial appeal. If the taxpayer has extensively described the facts in its appeal, it may use them as the basis for arguments that were not advanced at the time of filing the original appeal but that have since become apparent to the taxpayer on reviewing the tax authorities' arguments and supporting documents.

The tribunal decides on the merits of the case, having regard to the formal and substantive aspects of the assessment. Because tax law is a matter of public policy, the tribunal must decide not only on the basis of the grounds alleged by the parties, but also on the grounds that it finds relevant. The tribunal is not bound by the brief of arguments of the parties, but it cannot grant a party more than has been claimed.

The tribunal's decision may be contested before the court of appeals. Appeals must be lodged within one month after the contested judgment has been served by a bailiff.<sup>33</sup>

If the tribunal decides to annul the tax bill wholly or partly for a reason other than the statute of limitations, the case remains pending before the court for an additional six-month period, during which the tax authorities may submit an alternative assessment based on all or part of the same elements as the annulled tax to the tribunal (Article 356 CIR1992).<sup>34</sup> In such cases, the parties' right to appeal against the tribunal's decision is suspended. If the tax authorities submit an alternative assessment, the deadline to lodge an appeal against the tribunal's decision starts running from the time the decision on the alternative assessment is served.

The tax authorities are not allowed to submit an alternative assessment if the tax director fails to decide on the complaint before the taxpayer brings the case before the tribunal.

ii Right to appeal

The court of appeal has full jurisdiction and must revisit the case. The procedural steps are the same as those before the tribunal.

Unless the first president of the court of appeal decides otherwise in specific circumstances, the taxpayer is heard by a single judge.

iii Appeal on a point of law

The court of appeal decision may be challenged before the Supreme Court, but only on the grounds that the decision would be in conflict with the law or that it would infringe an essential procedural requirement.

If the Supreme Court quashes the court of appeal decision, the case will be submitted to another court of appeal, which will have jurisdiction only to the extent to which the dictum of the earlier decision has been invalidated.

iv Preliminary rulings

Tribunals, courts of appeals and the Supreme Court may refer tax issues for a preliminary ruling before the Constitutional Court or the European Court of Justice (ECJ).

33 An appeal against a decision to which the taxpayer previously bowed is not admissible, even if the decision has never been served (Cass, 30 June 2016).

34 The alternative tax may be linked to an assessment year other than the assessment year to which the annulled tax was related (Cass, 17 October 2013).

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

i Administrative penalties

Any understatement of income tax may give rise to administrative fines of up to €1,250 being imposed by the tax authorities (Article 445 CIR1992). A flat penalty of €6,250 applies if the taxpayer omits to report information relating to the Cayman tax (Article 445 CIR1992).<sup>35</sup>

If income of at least €2,500 is not reported, the tax authorities may also impose proportional surtaxes depending on the type of infringement, and increasing in the event of repetition (Article 444 CIR1992). The surtaxes range from 10 to 200 per cent. An infringement is repeated only if notice of a first infringement has already been given before the subsequent infringement is committed (Article 229 Royal Decree implementing CIR1992 (AR/CIR92)). If the taxpayer correctly files four returns in a row, previous infringements are ignored (Articles 227 and 228 AR/CIR92). The aggregate amount of tax and surtaxes cannot exceed the amount of unreported income (Article 444 CIR1992).<sup>36</sup> The tax authorities must restate the facts that justify the penalty, its legal ground and the justification of the amount of the penalty.<sup>37</sup>

In certain circumstances, a specific tax rate (100 per cent) applies to hidden earnings and insufficiently documented expenses made by companies and not-for-profit organisations ('secret fees') (Articles 219, 225, 246 and 247 CIR1992).

ii Criminal penalties

In addition to administrative penalties, the law also provides for criminal penalties, which are applied by the courts. Besides imprisonment, a taxpayer who has committed fraud or forgery may be sentenced to a fine of up to €500,000 (Articles 449 and 450 CIR1992). The amount of the fine to which the taxpayer is sentenced is multiplied by six (Article 457 CIR1992).<sup>38</sup>

iii Una via principle

The Act of 20 September 2012 introduced the una via principle in tax matters, inspired by the ne bis in idem principle: a taxpayer cannot be sentenced to both administrative penalties and criminal sanctions for the same offence. The Act of 20 September 2012 provides that if the public prosecutor initiates prosecution against a taxpayer, administrative penalties and the limitation period are suspended. Nevertheless, investigations by the tax authorities are not suspended during the prosecution's investigations. A non-suit decision taken by the prosecutor ends the suspension of administrative penalties and the limitation period. If the public prosecutor decides to refer the case to a criminal court, administrative fines and proportional surtaxes are definitely not due, whatever the criminal court decides on the case 35 A look-through tax applied to offshore legal arrangements set up by private individuals.

36 The Constitutional Court held that the judge must be allowed to give conditional sentences (Const Court, 55/2014, 27 March 2014).

37 Cass, 19 October 2012.

38 These penalties have been applicable to offences committed since November 2012. Offences committed before November 2012 could result in imprisonment and fines of up to €125,000; the amount of these fines cannot be multiplied (old Article 457 CIR1992)

(new Articles 444 and 445 CIR1992). The Constitutional Court has annulled the provisions of this act that allow public prosecutions despite the fact that the taxpayer has already been sentenced to fines or administrative penalties.<sup>39</sup>

i Recovering overpaid tax

Refund of taxes and interest

Withholding tax on moveable property income or professional income and early payments of tax are creditable against the final tax calculated upon assessment, and the excess is refundable. The final tax should be assessed by 30 June of the year following the assessment year or six months after the timely filing of the tax return. If the tax bill announces a refund, interest accrues in favour of the taxpayer from the third month after the period of limitations on assessment has run until the date of payment (Articles 359, 353 and 419 CIR1992). In certain circumstances, refundable amounts are credited against other outstanding amounts instead of being paid in cash. Refundable amounts may also be used to offset tax liabilities other than income tax, unless such other taxes are contested.<sup>40</sup>

With respect to withholding tax, the beneficiary of the income and the debtor are entitled to claim a refund of the withholding tax in the absence of a timely assessment, or if the tax was unduly withheld (Commentary on CIR1992, 366/3).<sup>41</sup> Unless the tax authorities have made use of the contested withholding tax to offset a tax debt, the period allowed to the taxpayer to claim the refund of unduly paid withholding tax is five years from 1 January of the year during which the withholding was paid to the Treasury (Article 368 CIR1992). If the claim for a refund is filed by the beneficiary of the income, interest accrues in its favour. On the other hand, if the debtor of the income claims the refund of the tax that it spontaneously withheld at source, no interest accrues (Article 419 CIR1992).<sup>42</sup> In specific circumstances, the law excludes interest accrual on refundable amounts. Nevertheless, interest should accrue where withholding tax has not been credited as a result of a mistake by the tax authorities, such as a delay in the assessment of final tax.<sup>43</sup>

Interest is calculated at the legal rate of 7 per cent on the amount of overpayment (Act of 5 May 1865 on interest-bearing loans).

The statute of limitations on the recovery of annulled taxes is 10 years from the annulment.<sup>44</sup>

ii Tax rescission

The tax director may also rescind surtaxes resulting from clerical errors or misunderstandings of fact, double taxation or evidence that could not be invoked in a timely fashion for reasons

41 The complaint against a tax unduly withheld is admissible even if the taxpayer does not report the income in its tax return (Cass, 14 January 2016).

beyond the taxpayer's power, provided that the surtaxes are brought to the director's attention within five years from 1 January of the year during which the tax has been assessed, and he or she has not decided on a complaint against the contested surtax (Article 376/1 CIR1992).

An error that results from a standpoint of the taxpayer when filling in the tax return is not a clerical error.<sup>45</sup> When the reported profit appears from the financial statements, the taxpayer cannot amend the results of a choice it made when establishing those statements, as opposed to an erroneous recording of a transaction.<sup>46</sup>

New legislation or case law cannot be viewed as new circumstances that may lead to rescission. However, if the Constitutional Court holds that a tax law provision conflicts with the Constitution, the taxpayer may request that a tax imposed by virtue of such a provision be rescinded even if the Constitutional Court's decision has been officially released within the six-month period allowed to file a complaint and therefore the taxpayer was able to file a complaint (see Section II.iv, supra).<sup>47</sup>

The tax authorities admit that a ruling of the ECJ stating that Belgian law is in conflict with EU law may also lead to rescission.

If a Belgian legal provision is annulled by the Constitutional Court, the taxpayer may file a complaint against a tax imposed pursuant to the annulled provision although ordinary time limits have expired. The ECJ has been asked whether a ruling of the ECJ stating that a national provision is conflicting with EU law amounts to a ruling of the Constitutional Court annulling a notional provision and, as a consequence, the same time limits would apply to contest a tax established pursuant to a provision criticised by the ECJ or pursuant to a provision annulled by the Constitutional Court.

The tax director may also rescind surtaxes that appear on the occasion of a mutual agreement procedure organised under a double tax treaty or a procedure provided by the EU Arbitration Convention (Article 376/3 CIR1992).

iii Challenging administrative decisions

The Belgian Constitution provides that a tax can only be levied and exemption can only be granted by an act of parliament ('no taxation without representation'). The Constitutional Court has repeatedly held that the power to decide on the principle of a tax and its essential elements belongs to the legislature.<sup>48</sup>

Therefore, the tax authorities and the courts are not allowed to relieve a taxpayer of its liability as stated by law. As a consequence, an agreement between the tax authorities and a taxpayer cannot be binding if it settles a legal issue. A taxpayer cannot rely on its legitimate expectations if its understanding of its tax situation deviates from the law. Even bona fide does not help.<sup>49</sup>

However, a taxpayer may invoke a rule that supersedes an act, such as the Constitution, European legislation and the European Convention on Human Rights. A taxpayer may even claim the annulment of an act that conflicts with the Constitution before the Constitutional Court within six months of the official publication of the act.

48 Const Court, 72/2005, 20 April 2005; 32/2007, 21 February 2007.

49 Cass, 14 June 1999; Cass, 20 November 2006.

Ordinary courts and tribunals are willing to discuss the compliance of a Belgian act with superior international rules and to set aside a non-complying act. Belgian judges do not always refer such cases to the ECJ, and decide themselves whether a contested Belgian provision complies with EU law.<sup>50</sup> However, they are often reluctant to decide on the compliance of an act with the Constitution, and will rather refer the issue to the Constitutional Court.

When a Belgian tax provision is held to be contrary to a superior rule by the Constitutional Court or the ECJ, the tax authorities defer to case law before the contested provision is amended by the legislature, and even invite the taxpayers to behave as though such a provision has been amended.

iv Claimants

Tax complaints and appeals must be filed by the taxpayer on whom the tax is imposed.<sup>51</sup> A tax imposed on a taxpayer cannot be challenged by another person, unless that person has succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the taxpayer. For example, in the case of a merger or a split-up, the company that inherits the liabilities of the absorbed or split company is entitled to file a complaint or an appeal against the tax bill assessed in the name of the latter. A company validly acts through its directors or managers appointed according to company law.

If a company is wound up, the person appointed as a liquidator is entitled to act in this capacity. The liquidator is also allowed to file a complaint in the name of the company whose liquidation is closed. Bankrupt companies are validly represented by the administrator in the insolvency.

A proxy holder may file a complaint in the name of a taxpayer. Tax consultants may act as proxy holders when filing a complaint, but they are not authorised to represent their customers before the courts. The tax authorities acknowledge that attorneys-at-law represent their clients when filing a complaint, as well as before the courts, and do not need to prove it (Commentary on CIR1992, 366/9).<sup>52</sup>

i Duty for listing a case

When filing a petition before the tribunal or an appeal before the court of appeal or the Supreme Court, the taxpayer must submit a tax return if the amount at stake exceeds €250,000. The plaintiff must pay €300 to have its case on the list of the tribunal if the amount at stake is between €250,001 and €500,000, or €500 if the amount at stake is more than €500,000.<sup>53</sup>

50 Even the Constitutional Court refused to submit to the ECJ the issue of the euro-compatibility of the fiscal deduction of antitrust fines imposed by the European Commission (Const Court, 161/2012, 20 December 2012).

51 However, tax claims and appeals against withholding taxes may be filed either by the taxpayer that earned the income on which the tax has been unduly withheld or by the debtor of income that unduly withheld taxes on such income.

52 See, however, Cass, 12 February 2016.

53 The appellant must pay €600 or €800, respectively if the amount at stake is more than €250,000 or €500,000. The duties to have a case on the list of the Supreme Court are

ii Indemnities

As a reaction to the Supreme Court holding that the winner of a case brought before a court might also obtain damages corresponding to the cost of the assistance of an attorney in certain situations,<sup>54</sup> the legislature has provided that a fixed indemnity is due to the winner from the defeated party, to wholly or partly cover the fees due from the winner to his or her attorney; this prevents the winner from requesting indemnities in excess of the legally fixed amount (Article 1022 of the Judicial Code).

This legal indemnity is liquidated by the court on the basis of tables. The regular indemnity ranges from €180 to €18,000 when the amount at stake is at least €1 million.

The indemnity is only due when the winner has hired an attorney to assist him or her before the court. The tax authorities are also liable for indemnities when they lose their cases.<sup>55</sup>

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

i Advance rulings

The Act of 24 December 2002 has organised the current ‘advance ruling’ procedure. This procedure seems to meet the expectations of numerous taxpayers.

The federal tax authorities release advance rulings on any question relating to a tax they are in charge of, except questions relating to collection or proceedings. As a rule, the tax authorities cannot deliver a ruling regarding transactions with a low-tax country that does not cooperate according to the standards of the OECD, or transactions that have no economic substance in Belgium.

An advance ruling is a legal act through which the tax authorities determine how the legislation in force will apply to a situation or a transaction that has not yet triggered fiscal consequences. The Ruling Commission may therefore not intrude in tax disputes.

Advance rulings are effective for five years unless the taxpayer demonstrates that a longer validity period is appropriate. In addition, the ruling is cancelled:

- a* when the requirements that it states are not satisfied;
- b* when the taxpayer has not provided an accurate description of the envisaged situation;
- c* when the legislation on which the ruling relied (including Belgian and EU law and treaties) is modified; or
- d* when it appears that the ruling conflicts with Belgian, EU law or treaties.

In this respect, a memorandum has been concluded between the local services of the tax authorities to ensure that the latter would not challenge the legality of an advance ruling.

The Ruling Commission allows taxpayers (represented by counsel) to file a preliminary request on a no-name basis. If it finds that it may satisfy the taxpayer’s request, it invites the taxpayer to file a formal request. If it considers that it cannot satisfy the taxpayer, the taxpayer will simply not continue the procedure.

€800 or €1,200, respectively (Law of 28 April 2015, amending the registration duty code).

54 Cass, 2 September 2004, 5 May 2006, 16 November 2006 and 28 March 2007.

55 Const Court, 68/2015, 69/2015, 70/2015, 21 May 2015.

The cost of such a procedure mainly depends on the fees requested by tax counsel to assist clients, since the tax authorities are not allowed to charge fees to taxpayers.

ii Tax Conciliation Service (TCS)

The Act of 25 April 2007 created the TCS to serve as an interface between taxpayers and the federal tax authorities. The TCS has been operating since 2010. Although it belongs to the tax authorities, it is independent from other services. By the same token, it has no authority to give instructions to other services. It may decline a request for conciliation.

The TCS acknowledges receipt of requests filed in writing (even by e-mail) or orally. Even when the TCS cannot satisfy the taxpayer's expectations, its report on a case can be useful as supporting documentation before a court.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

According to the Constitution, no tax can be levied unless the legislature so provides. A taxpayer may choose to organise its transactions in a manner that triggers little taxation. The taxpayer must, however, accept all the consequences of its acts. The tax authorities must set aside disguised transactions and adhere to the legal reality created by the taxpayers.<sup>56</sup> Sham is a fraud.

The tax authorities may also ignore transactions conducted by a taxpayer that infringe a non-tax legal provision of public policy if its intent is to defeat or evade tax.<sup>57</sup> However, the tax authorities cannot rely on the economic reality or the concept of abuse of law to adjust the situation of a taxpayer.

The Act of 29 March 2012 introduced the concept of 'tax abuse' in Article 344/1 CIR1992. The provision reads as follows (free translation): The tax authorities may disregard the legal act or a series of legal acts composing the same transaction if the tax authorities demonstrate by presumptions [or otherwise] and in the light of objective circumstances that tax abuse has been committed.

There is tax abuse when the taxpayer realises, by his or her legal act or series of legal acts, one of the following transactions:

- a* a transaction allowing it to escape the application of a provision of the Income Tax Code or the decrees implementing that Code in violation of the goals of such a provision; or
- b* a transaction allowing it to claim a tax benefit provided by a provision of the Income Tax Code or the decrees implementing that Code while the grant of such a benefit would be conflicting with the goals of such a provision and the main purpose of that transaction is the grant of such a benefit.

The onus is on the taxpayer to demonstrate that the choice of this legal act or series of legal acts is justified by motives other than the avoidance of income tax.

If the taxpayer does not provide any evidence to the contrary, the taxable base and the computation of the tax are restored in such a manner that the transaction is subject to a levy complying with the goals of the law, as if the abuse never took place.

The Constitutional Court has held that this provision does not conflict with the constitutional principle according to which no tax can be levied in the absence of clear legislation. The Constitutional Court held that this provision only relates to the burden and administration of evidence in tax matters, and does not affect the basis and the rate of taxes. The tax authorities must demonstrate the purpose of the legislature when asserting that a taxpayer acted in a manner that they view as an abuse.<sup>58</sup>

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

Belgium has concluded around 100 double taxation treaties. Belgian-resident taxpayers may initiate in Belgium the mutual agreement procedure provided by double taxation treaties, and rely on the assistance of the central tax authorities to challenge a foreign tax at source. The outcome of such a procedure is, however, dependent on the best efforts of both the Belgian and the source country's authorities.

When interpreting a double taxation treaty, the Belgian tax authorities rely on the OECD Commentary on the Model, unless Belgium has made reservations on the Model or its Commentary. The Belgian tax authorities use the ambulatory method of interpretation. They even refer to the latest version of the OECD Commentary when it can be reconciled with the text of the relevant treaty and specific commentaries made on this treaty.

The Belgian tax authorities even agree that the interpretation of undefined terms used in treaties must be found in the source country's legislation when deciding whether income has been taxed abroad according to the treaty. However, they use Belgian definitions when determining which method of elimination of double taxation must be used in Belgium (Article 23(A) of the OECD Model Tax Treaty, Article 22 of the Belgian standard treaty).<sup>59</sup>

X AREAS OF FOCUS

The Law of 25 December 2016 provides for specific rules to secure the recovery of the state aid determined by the European Commission in its decision on Belgian excess profit rulings, and the refund of the same amounts if the Commission's decision is annulled.<sup>60</sup>

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

The current tax procedure is the result of a reform specific to the tax procedure in 1999 and a general reform of the judicial procedure in 2007. Those reforms were intended to speed up the process, but delays remain considerable. Reasons for such delays include a shortage of judges, the recent reform of the courts' structures and the length of time required by the central tax authorities to issue clear instructions to tax inspectors.

BRAZIL

I INTRODUCTION

Brazilian companies may face tax disputes whenever controversial tax issues are involved. Since there is no alternative way to solve disputes in tax matters, litigation is the legal mechanism used to not only contest levies and tax assessments that are deemed undue, but also as a proactive way to gain judicial recognition of taxpayers' rights regarding possible tax law interpretations.

The Brazilian Federal Constitution sets forth guidelines for the tax system, and allocates the right of federal, state and municipal governments to impose taxes. In addition, there are supplementary federal laws, such as the National Tax Code (CTN), Law 87/96 and Law 116/03, which are in force in the entire Brazilian territory. To fulfil the requirements laid down by these laws, the federal, state and municipal governments are able to issue laws imposing tax obligations on activities carried out in their jurisdictions.

The main federal taxes are:

- a* corporate income tax and social contributions on net profits;
- b* contributions for the social integration programme and contributions for the financing of social security, both imposed over corporate taxpayers' gross revenue;
- c* tax on manufactured products;
- d* tax on financial transactions;
- e* contributions for interventions in the economic domain; and
- f* import tax.<sup>2</sup>

1 Daniella Zagari is a partner and Maria Eugênia Doin Vieira is a senior associate at Machado, Meyer, Sendacz e Opice Advogados.

2 Tax on rural property and freight surcharges for the renewal of the Merchant Marines are also federal taxes.

The most relevant state tax in Brazil is the state value added tax (ICMS), which is imposed on transactions involving sales and other commercial operations involving goods (including energy supply), the rendering of inter-municipal or interstate transport services, and communication services. Supplementary Law 87/96 establishes the main features of ICMS and provides general legal standards for the states, but each state has its own local legislation.<sup>3</sup>

Regarding the municipalities, the most important tax is the municipal tax on services, which is imposed on the rendering of services of any nature, except those that are covered by the state tax, ICMS. Its main features are provided for by Supplementary Law 116/03, which is mandatory for all Brazilian municipalities,<sup>4</sup> and which all have their own local legislation as well.

Taking into account the existence of the many taxes and pieces of legislation, tax disputes often arise from a misinterpretation of the constitutional and legal taxation limits, and from conflicts regarding tax bodies and their jurisdiction.

The past few years have seen many changes in tax disputes in Brazil, especially due to the transformation at the federal administrative courts, which has created a trend of high amounts being discussed and not solved in administrative proceedings that will be discussed afterwards at the judicial level.

Moreover, the judicial procedure system was reformed by the enactment of a new Civil Procedure Code (CPC), in force since March 2016, which is also applicable for tax litigations. It aims to create a more effective, fair and dynamic procedure, and to improve the binding precedents system. Scholars, academics, lawyers and lawmakers debated this modification for several years at the Parliament.

In both the judicial and administrative spheres, the migration from a physical form (hard copy) to a digital form (electronic procedure) of tax filing is at an advanced stage, which also reduces the time involved in filing and the duration of proceedings.

Due to ancillary obligations, the tax authorities already have access to most of the relevant tax information in digital form, which improves the efficiency of the system for reviewing taxpayers' procedures.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Tax disputes in Brazil take place in the administrative sphere or judiciary sphere.

Litigating in the administrative sphere is optional and not binding on taxpayers, meaning that taxpayers can opt to litigate directly before the judicial level, and an unfavourable final decision in the administrative sphere can still be challenged in the judicial sphere. However, if taxpayers choose to bring a tax dispute directly before the judicial sphere, bypassing the administrative sphere, this is legally deemed as a waiver of the right to an administrative dispute.

Litigation in the administrative sphere is usually simpler, quicker and less burdensome, because the structure of the proceeding is less complex and there is no need to present a guarantee during the proceeding. The law grants the suspension of the enforceability of the debt during the entire administrative dispute.

3 Gift and inheritance tax and property tax on vehicles are also state taxes.

4 Property tax on urban real estate and transfer tax on real estate are also municipal taxes.

An administrative tax dispute usually begins with the presentation of a taxpayer's opposition against a tax assessment, or against an administrative decision denying a request for refund or offset of undue paid taxes.

The administrative procedure system is well regulated, especially by the federal and state governments, and allows taxpayers to present their initial opposition, appeal or counter arguments and, occasionally, a special or extraordinary appeal, this latter usually being conditioned on the existence of a precedent in conflict with the appealed decision.

Most of the administrative ruling authorities are skilled in specific technical tax features; as such, a taxpayer's opposition or appeal generally has a good chance of success in correcting miscalculations or mistakes in tax assessments.

It is also possible for a taxpayer to start an administrative procedure to consult with the tax authorities regarding the application of the tax law in a concrete situation whenever there is an objective doubt concerning the interpretation of the law. The administrative answer (ruling) to the consultation will be binding for both the tax authorities and taxpayers at the administrative level, but taxpayers can challenge it at the judicial level in cases of disagreement.

From a judicial perspective, litigation may start in various ways.

If an administrative dispute results in an unfavourable decision for the taxpayer, or if the taxpayer chose to bypass the administrative sphere, it can litigate before the judiciary by adopting a proactive or retroactive approach.

The proactive approach means that the taxpayer can begin the judicial dispute by filing a lawsuit against a tax assessment, an unfavourable administrative decision, or both. The law provides that the full charged amount must be court deposited. However, judicial precedents temper this requirement, in the sense that the taxpayer can file the lawsuit without the deposit, but will not obtain a suspension of the enforceability of the debt. In some specific cases, the suspension of the enforceability can be granted by the court with the presentation of other types of guarantees or, exceptionally, without any guarantee.

Taxpayers may also file a judicial lawsuit to discuss a given tax burden that is deemed undue, or to recover undue paid taxes based on factual, legal or constitutional aspects.

In the retroactive approach, taxpayers will wait for the public attorney (federal, state or municipal) to file a tax foreclosure in order to present their opposition. In this case, taxpayers must present a guarantee within five days, and then plus 30 days, to file their motion to stay foreclosure.

The suspension of the enforceability of a debt or guarantee accepted by the court legally grants a tax good standing certificate, a document deemed necessary for many legal acts in the course of taxpayers' operations, such as to provide proof of commercial health, to receive payments from public entities, to transfer real estate and to be entitled to tax benefits. However, the mere existence of a guarantee does not grant the suspension of the enforceability of a debt, it being necessary that the taxpayer demonstrate good grounds for its plea and the risks involved.

Without the suspension of the enforceability of the debt, the public attorney can request seizures or other procedures of property expropriation.

The law lists, in a preference scale format, the possible guarantees, with a cash deposit being preferred. Bank letter guarantees and insurance bonds are deemed equivalent guarantees by the law. The list also contemplates public bonds, precious stones or metals, real estate, ships, aircraft, cars, stocks and rights.

Under both the proactive and retroactive approaches, a taxpayer's plea petition should contain a written document of all the factual, legal, constitutional or other grounds relied on.

III THE COURTS

As taxes are due to the federal, state and municipal governments, each government level has its own administrative litigation structure, usually comprising first and second level courts.

Most first level courts do not allow taxpayers to attend hearings and present oral arguments, which are common procedures at the second level administrative courts and judicial courts.

The ruling authorities in the first level administrative courts are usually the tax authorities, members of the respective Federal, State or Municipal Treasury Affairs. The second level courts, such as the federal court, usually comprise a panel composed of appointed tax authorities, and taxpayers' representatives appointed by the Industries Union, federations or associations.

As a rule, administrative courts are not allowed to disregard the law based on an allegation that it is against the Federal Constitution.

In the judicial sphere, there are state courts responsible for state and municipal taxes and federal courts responsible for federal taxes. Both have first and second level courts. The first level courts have head or deputy judges, while the second level courts have panels formed by three or five judges, depending on the type of appeal.

i Federal Administrative Council of Tax Appeals (CARF)

The most relevant administrative court is CARF. Located in the federal capital, it is responsible for analysing all federal tax proceedings at the second and third levels, as it analyses appeals at the ordinary chambers and special appeals of its superior chamber of tax appeals (CSRF), this latter body focusing on standardising the administrative courts' understanding on matters. According to the tax involved, the proceedings are distributed to one of three sections in CARF. Each section has four chambers with eight members. Each CSRF is composed of 10 members: half are appointed by the tax authorities and half by taxpayers associations' representatives. The tax authorities always appoint the chair of the chambers, including the chair of the CSRF. The chair has the casting vote in the case of a tie.

CARF has been responsible for the most relevant tax litigations over the years, and was regarded to be a highly technical and fair court, establishing relevant precedents to guide the interpretation of the tax law. This is why, in many circumstances, taxpayers have adhered to its decisions, even if unfavourable, and not challenged them before the judicial court.

However, in the past few years, CARF has suffered a loss of reputation for various reasons. As a result of this lack of credibility, a lot of tax disputes that could have been solved at the administrative level are restarted at the judicial level.

ii Federal Supreme Court (STF)

STF is the last instance in the judicial sphere, and is focused on constitutional issues.

Considering that the Constitution lays down the guidelines for the tax system, a lot of tax issues have constitutional grounds and must be examined by STF. Nowadays, extraordinary appeals are only admitted when there is proof of a decision having general repercussions, meaning that the issue has to have economic, politic, social or juridical relevance to be analysed.

After STF decides that there is a general repercussion, the issue involved is publicly disclosed as a theme attributed to a proceeding awaiting trial. In the meantime, all other cases regarding the same theme are suspended after the second level local court's decisions, as the STF decision in the leading case will be automatically applied to all these cases and to all future cases with the same theme.

STF comprises 11 justices appointed by the President and formally confirmed by the Federal Senate.

iii Superior Court of Justice (STJ)

STJ analyses special appeals presented from all the other courts whenever a treaty or federal law is applied in incorrectly or there is a different interpretation of the federal law between local courts (federal or state courts). The decision issued by STJ is final when there is no constitutional issue to be discussed.

Since STJ was unable to analyse the numerous cases it received, it selects some relevant and often-repeated issues to be analysed as themes. In this sense, STJ has ruled in leading cases that are called repetitive appeals, and its solutions in these appeals should reach all other similar cases.

While STJ has 33 justices, tax disputes are ruled by two panels of the first section, each of which is composed of five justices. STJ justices are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Federal Senate. STJ submits a pre-approved three-name list for the President to choose from.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

The late payment of federal taxes is subject to a 20 per cent fine. In a tax assessment, the regular fine is 75 per cent over the tax debt. In the event that there are charges of deliberate misconduct, fraud or simulation, an aggravated fine of 150 per cent is imposed.

For state and municipal taxes, fines vary according to the local legislation and the time period.

In some cases, the calculation of interest is so burdensome that there are good grounds to challenge it. In the state of São Paulo, Law 13.918/09 imposes excessive interest that is far greater than the federal interest. The highest state court of São Paulo has declared illegal rates that exceed the federal rates, but new assessments still impose those interests.

Depending on the subject matter involved, some tax assessments are sent to the Public Prosecutor's Office to be evaluated for the potential existence of criminal issues. A criminal prosecution should only commence after the administrative discussion is over and results in an unfavourable result for the taxpayer.

i Recovering overpaid tax

Taxpayers have five years to claim a refund of undue or overpaid federal, state or municipal taxes. The legislation and judicial precedents state that these amounts are subject to the same interest and monetary correction rates applied to tax debts.

Whenever legally accepted, offset of tax of the same nature as upcoming taxes can be the most efficient way to recover overpaid taxes. The offset procedure is usually simple, and allows the immediate use of the credit, thereby avoiding a new tax payment.

As a rule, tax authorities have five years to accept or deny the offset, with a lack of manifestation or decision considered to be as deemed acceptance of the offset procedure.

Taxpayers must be able to present all the documental evidence regarding the undue payment.

Administrative courts generally do not grant offset when there is a legal or constitutional controversy about the actual existence of an undue payment. However, they are supposed to apply the judicially binding precedents issued by the Superior Court of Justice or by the Supreme Court.

If offset is denied for federal taxes, taxpayers will have the opportunity to start an administrative dispute proceeding that will follow the same procedure model adopted for challenging tax assessments. In the case of final unfavourable result for a taxpayer in the administrative sphere, the taxes considered undue for offset will be subject to fines that may vary from 20 to 150 per cent.

In other cases, when a specific law forbids the offset or if there is no debt flow to offset, taxpayers may file an administrative or judicial claim for a refund, presenting documental proof of the undue payment.

If there are some controversial issues to be addressed regarding legal interpretations or unconstitutionality, a judicial claim for refund or event to resolve the controversial issue is recommended, considering the limitations of the administrative proceedings.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

In general, the possibility of an appeal within 15 or 30 days of a decision is applicable for most administrative decisions. One point of concern is that in some cases a reduction of fines diminishes with the appeal.

Administrative decisions rendered against tax authorities are usually submitted to an automatic review (ex-official appeal). Nevertheless, a final administrative decision against the tax authorities is final and cannot be challenged in the judicial sphere.

Taxpayers can always challenge final administrative decisions in the judicial sphere.

Whenever an undue payment is legally or constitutionally controversial, taxpayers may file a lawsuit aimed at the recognition of their right to recover the unduly paid amounts. As previously mentioned, the administrative courts are supposed to enforce the law, and are not able to declare the unconstitutionality of a tax obligation imposed by the law. Therefore, allegations involving constitutional issues must be presented at the judicial courts, unless they arise from a binding judicial precedent.

iii Claimants

The tax authorities initiate tax claims whenever their analysis of an offset or an audit indicates that taxes were not duly paid. If there is no administrative dispute, or if the administrative court confirms the tax assessment, a public attorney will file a tax foreclosure.

Taxpayers can present claims regarding taxes that were unduly paid or if there is a legitimate risk of taxes being unduly charged. Legitimacy is assured to the taxpayer considered to be the one who paid the tax and kept its burden. Therefore, in the case of indirect taxes, there must be proof that such burden was not reflected during the steps of the business chain.

VI COSTS

Administrative disputes attract no court costs and assure the suspension of the enforceability of the debt, granting the good standing certificate up to the final decision.

Initiating a judicial dispute or presenting an appeal is subject to court costs that are based on the amount involved (for federal disputes, 1 per cent of the amount involved; for state disputes, the percentage varies). Nevertheless, there is always a maximum capped value, which varies for each state but is no higher than US$25,000.<sup>5</sup> For federal courts, the current cap is US$600, meaning that in many cases the court costs are not significant. On the closure of a judicial proceeding, the judge will sentence the defeated litigant to reimburse the other party of all anticipated court costs, and to pay judicial attorneys' fees up to 20 per cent of the involved amount according to the progressive chart under Section 85 of the CPC. These fees are mandatory (unless a writ of mandamus is filed), and might represent exposure whenever significant amounts are discussed.

In the event that there is a need to present a bond or insurance guarantee in order to suspend the enforceability of the debt under discussion, this financial cost might also be relevant.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

According to the Federal Constitution, the law alone is allowed to impose and exclude tax obligations. As such, Brazilian law does not allow for alternative tax dispute resolutions. The law is binding on all public workers in all spheres of government, who have no discretionary power.

Federal tax authorities enforce the law as interpreted by the General Attorney's Office and by the Brazilian Federal Revenue Office. After a binding judicial decision, in the event that it settles a dispute against the tax authorities' interpretation, the responsible office will issue a new note informing its attorneys to submit to the decision and, if applicable, point out the attendant facts that might result in a different approach to such case.

It is worth mentioning that in some cases it is possible to have a discussion with the tax authorities with the aim of them granting a special tax regime for ancillary obligations. Although this might have a significant impact on an operation, this measure has to be put in place prior to the dispute and the tax liability, since a good standing certificate is a requirement for such proceeding.

On the past few years, due to Brazil's economic crisis, the federal and state governments have legally approved periodic tax amnesty programmes that grant the payment of tax debts in instalments, and that grant reduced fines and interest.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

In 2001, Brazilian general anti-avoidance rules were introduced for both domestic and international transactions under Section 116 of the CTN. Accordingly, tax authorities may disregard transactions carried out with the purpose of concealing taxable events or of modifying the tax liability. This general anti-avoidance rule still depends on further regulation concerning the conditions, criteria and procedures to be followed by the tax authorities.

From an international perspective, it is worth mentioning that transfer pricing rules (Brazilian TP rules) were adopted in Brazil in 1996. The conciliation of the Brazilian TP rules with internationally accepted transfer pricing methods became one of the biggest challenges faced by multinational enterprises in Brazil. The difficulties relate mainly to the deviation of the Brazilian TP Rules from the OECD's Transfer Pricing Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises and Tax Administrations. Regarding such deviations, it should be noted that there is no leeway for advance pricing agreements under the Brazilian TP legislation, and that Brazilian law has adopted fixed margins for the various methods regardless of the nature of the taxpayer's business, industry or role in the transaction (i.e., there is no functional analysis). The law provides that the Minister of Finance may establish other statutory margins for each industry to determine the parameter price in controlled transactions.

Cross-border transactions carried out by legal entities incorporated in Brazil shall be subject to transfer pricing controls when entered into with related parties, or parties located in low tax jurisdictions or under privileged tax regimes, irrespective of whether the two parties qualify as associated enterprises. The Brazilian TP Rules do not apply to cross-border payments of trademark or patent royalties, or to fees payable as compensation for the transfer of technology, or for the rendering of technical, administrative or scientific assistance services with a transfer of technology or know-how. The relevant agreements are to be registered with the Brazilian Intellectual Property Agency and the Central Bank of Brazil.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

Brazil currently has DTTs in force with more than 30 jurisdictions. Its treaty network is small and relatively old. Notwithstanding the fact that Brazil is not a member of the OECD, Brazilian DTTs follow, to a great extent, the OECD Model Tax Convention in force at the time the DTTs were signed, mainly in relation to making Brazil more attractive in terms of offering taxing rights to the source state. For this reason, recent precedents indicate that Brazilian courts have been adopting official OECD Commentaries on the Model Tax Convention. A distinct aspect of Brazil's treaty policy, which deviates from the OECD Model Tax Convention, is the inclusion of matching credit clauses in DTTs signed with developed countries, especially with respect to the payment of dividends, interest and royalties (e.g., treaties entered into with Austria, Hungary, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, etc.). Because Brazil is primarily a capital-importer, Brazilian DTTs also generally tend to privilege source taxation as opposed to granting exclusive taxing rights to the state of residence of the beneficiary of the income.

In addition, it is important to note that the interaction between DTTs and domestic law is not entirely regulated by the Brazilian legal system. It is generally understood among Brazilian scholars that DTTs consist of an agreement of will entered into between two contracting states and may not be revoked at the discretion of one of these states without triggering a violation to the 'pacta sunt servanda' principle that rules the applicability of such treaties.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Recent focus has been on the ongoing dispute between taxpayers and tax authorities regarding the credits registration applicable to the industrial, commercial and services operations aiming at reducing the tax burden. Tax authorities have already indicated their concern with this situation, and are conducting specific tax audits to identify and assess these controversial credits.

Taxpayers' attention should be on the documental proof of their operations and taxable events. Bearing in mind that the most relevant tax questions tend to be analysed by the superior courts on taxpayers' proceedings with binding effects, proof is the best way to qualify a specific case.

In this sense, it is essential to review internal proceedings, documentation, invoices and contracts to ensure they are in accordance with the tax legislation and its treatment.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

The Brazilian taxation system is complex and has many controversial issues that might not be informally solved. As such, Brazil is expected to continue to see many ongoing tax disputes. Nevertheless, there is a well-developed system to allow taxpayers to address tax issues.

The expectation is that in the near future, the judicial sphere will be even more skilled in facing the most complex tax matters since many relevant issues have recently been subject to disclosure in the administrative sphere and are about to be judicially challenged by taxpayers. The need to concentrate on analysing the facts and particulars of each company's activities will demand effort and cause improvements in judicial decisions.

One focal point in the judiciary sphere regards the reduction of litigation costs. The system needs to be amended to allow taxpayers to litigate proceedings without being overburdened. This measure is particularly relevant when it is possible to expect that many complex tax matters will be ruled in taxpayers' favour.

CANADA

Dominic C Belley<sup>1</sup>

I INTRODUCTION

Under the Constitution Act 1867, taxation is a shared jurisdiction. The federal parliament can enact laws for the purpose of levying taxes, both directly and indirectly. Provincial legislatures can enact laws for the purpose of levying direct taxes within the province only.<sup>2</sup> The first income tax statute – the Income War Tax Act – was enacted in 1917 as a temporary federal measure meant to finance the expenses related to the Canadian efforts in the context of World War I. Today, the measure is permanent, and both federal and provincial governments have enacted tax measures meant to finance a variety of government services (including healthcare and education) and support targeted business and social sectors. The principal taxes are imposed on income as well as goods and services (also referred to as commodity taxes or value-added taxes).<sup>3</sup> Specific taxes also apply to fuel and tobacco.<sup>4</sup>

The principal tax authority in Canada is the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA), which has the mandate of collecting most federal and provincial income taxes (both personal and corporate) and commodity taxes. The notable exception is the province of Quebec, which is in charge of collecting its own provincial taxes, through the Quebec Revenue Agency.<sup>5</sup>

3 For example The federal Goods and Services Tax (GST), the Harmonised Sales Tax applicable in certain Canadian provinces and collected by the federal government, and the Quebec Sales Tax (QST) applicable in Quebec.

4 For further reading on the distinction between taxes and regulatory charges, see Westbank First Nation v. BC Hydro and Power Authority, [1999] 3 SCR 134.

5 Pursuant to a federal–provincial agreement, the Quebec Revenue Agency is also in charge of the collection of federal GST in addition to the provincial QST.

Although these taxes may have substantial differences in terms of, inter alia, base, rates, taxpayers and reporting periods, the compliance and dispute resolution process is basically the same, both federally and provincially. As described further below:

- a* it starts with a return that the taxpayer is required to file;
- b* a first (or quick) assessment is then issued;
- c* the return can be audited by a tax auditor who may issue a reassessment within the normal reassessment;
- d* should the taxpayer disagree with the reassessment, he or she may object pursuant to a notice of objection; and
- e* if the matter cannot be resolved at the objection stage, the taxpayer may appeal to the Tax Court of Canada, and beyond to the Federal Court of Appeal and, with leave, to the Supreme Court of Canada.<sup>6</sup>

i Income tax returns

Canada has a self-reporting system. Pursuant to Section 150 of the Income Tax Act,<sup>7</sup> a return of income that is in prescribed form and that contains prescribed information shall be filed with the CRA, without notice or demand for the return, for each taxation year of a taxpayer.<sup>8</sup> The filing deadline will vary in accordance with the taxpayer's nature and status: for example, 30 April (individuals), 15 June (individuals carrying on a business), six months after the end of the financial year (corporations) and 90 days from the end of the year (trusts and estates). In accordance with Section 151, the taxpayer required by Section 150 to file a return of income shall, in the return, estimate the amount of tax payable. Pursuant to Section 241, any information disclosed to the CRA in this context is confidential and, except as provided by law, no official or other government representative shall knowingly provide, or knowingly allow to be provided to any person, any taxpayer information. Confidentiality in tax matters is a pillar of Canada's self-reporting system.

Shortly after the return is filed, a first assessment will be issued by the CRA (sometimes referred to as a quick assessment) in accordance with Section 152. There is no mandatory deadline for the first assessment; the CRA must assess with all due dispatch. Typically, the first assessment will be a reproduction of the numbers disclosed in the return and it will not be the result of an audit. The first assessment has, in the legal sense, the same status as an assessment or reassessment issued further to an audit. As such, it is, inter alia, deemed valid and subject to objection and appeal.

ii Audits and access to tax information

Once a return is filed, the CRA has vast audit powers to ensure that it has been truthfully prepared, that income has been fully declared and that taxes have been computed in accordance

6 To simplify the text, this chapter will present the federal income tax litigation process.

7 Income Tax Act, RSC, c 1 (5th Supplement).

with the law. Under Section 231.1 of the Income Tax Act, an auditor may at all reasonable times, for any purpose related to the administration of the Act, inspect, audit or examine the books and records of a taxpayer, and any document of the taxpayer or of any other person that relates or may relate to the information that is or should be in the books and records of the taxpayer or to any amount payable by the taxpayer under the Act.<sup>9</sup> In R v. McKinlay Transport Ltd.,<sup>10</sup> the Supreme Court of Canada concluded that these powers amounted to a seizure that was acceptable under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms on the basis that the taxpayer has a very low expectation of privacy in relation to the kind of information contained in its books and records for tax purposes. The Court concluded that the Minister of National Revenue must be capable of exercising his audit powers whether or not he has reasonable grounds for believing that a particular taxpayer has breached the Act. A spot check or a system of random monitoring may be the only way in which the integrity of the system can be maintained.

This is true to the extent that audit powers are used only for the ultimate purpose of issuing a reassessment (taxes, penalties and interest) (i.e., civil matters). These powers cannot be used in the context of a criminal investigation because of the liberty interest that is at stake. In R v. Jarvis,<sup>11</sup> the Supreme Court of Canada stated that there must be some measure of separation between the audit and investigative functions within the CRA. Where the predominant purpose of a particular inquiry is the determination of penal liability (as opposed to tax liability) CRA officials must relinquish the authority to use the audit powers under Section 231.1. In such a case, evidence must be gathered in accordance with the rules applicable in criminal matters and comply with the Canadian Charters of Rights of Freedoms (including the right to remain silent, presumption of innocence and proof of culpability beyond reasonable doubt).

A notable exception to the general rule that the CRA has access to any document and information relevant to a purpose of the Act in the course of a tax audit is if the document is protected by solicitor–client privilege. In Descoteaux v. Mierzwinski,<sup>12</sup> the Supreme Court of Canada established the substantive conditions precedent to the existence of the right of the lawyer’s client to confidentiality: where legal advice of any kind is sought from a professional legal adviser in his or her capacity as such, the communications relating to that purpose, made in confidence by the client, are permanently protected from disclosure by him or her or by the legal adviser, except the protection be waived. Not all communications are privileged; the communication must be made to the lawyer in his or her professional capacity to obtain legal advice. Of course, communications made to facilitate the commission of a crime or fraud will not be confidential.

9 Pursuant to Section 231.2, the CRA can issue a mandatory requirement to produce information and documents. A taxpayer who fails to comply with a mandatory requirement can be prosecuted before a tribunal of criminal jurisdiction pursuant to Section 238. The Crown would have to prove the failure (actus reus) but not the intention (mens rea); the taxpayer could present a due diligence defence. See City of Levis v. Tetreault, [2006] 1 SCR 420. Under Section 231.6, the CRA can require the production of foreign-based documents. The CRA can also obtain a compliance order under Section 231.7.

10 R v. McKinlay Transport Ltd., [1990] 1 SCR 627.

12 Descoteaux v. Mierzwinski, [1982] 1 SCR 860.

In Canada, the practice of taxation is shared among two major professional bodies: lawyers and accountants. Although both professions have substantially the same rights in terms of the professional acts they can make, communications between a taxpayer and a chartered professional accountant are currently not protected by solicitor–client privilege. Therefore, arguably, the CRA could use its powers under Sections 231.1 et seq. to access an accountant’s file. A recent example of this dichotomy is MNR v. BP Canada Energy,<sup>13</sup> in which the Federal Court of Canada granted the CRA’s application pursuant to Section 231.7 to get a copy of the tax accrual working papers prepared for the purpose of consolidated financial statements, which contain a list of uncertain tax positions (the issues list).<sup>14</sup>

iii Normal reassessment period

The period of time within which the CRA is expected to carry out its tax audit and issue a reassessment is the normal reassessment period defined under Sections 152(3.1) and 152(4) of the Income Tax Act. The normal reassessment period starts with the issuance of the first assessment. Depending upon the taxpayer’s status and the nature of the transactions under review, the normal reassessment period ends three (for an individual or private corporation), four (for a public corporation) or seven (for transactions involving a non-resident) years later. Within the normal reassessment period, the CRA can issue as many reassessments as it sees fit, and the subsequent reassessment cancels the previous one unless it is an additional assessment.

Pursuant to Sections 152(4) and (4.01), the CRA can issue a reassessment beyond the normal reassessment period only if the reassessment can reasonably be regarded as relating to either misrepresentation in the taxpayer’s return attributable to neglect, carelessness or wilful default, or fraud.<sup>15</sup> The CRA must prove misrepresentation on the balance of probabilities, and misrepresentation must take place when filing the return, not at another time.<sup>16</sup> The standard of care is that of a reasonably prudent taxpayer. In other words, the CRA must prove simple negligence of the taxpayer when filing his or her income tax return. According to the Federal Court of Appeal in The Queen v. Johnson,<sup>17</sup> when it is said that the standard of care is that of a wise and prudent person, it must be understood that wisdom is not infallibility and prudence is not perfection.<sup>18</sup>

i Tax appeals to the Tax Court of Canada

Pursuant to Section 169 of the Income Tax Act, where a taxpayer has served a notice of objection to an assessment under Section 165, the taxpayer may appeal to the Tax Court of Canada to have the assessment vacated or varied within 90 days after the CRA has confirmed

13 MNR v. BP Canada Energy, 2015 FC 714.

14 This case is currently under appeal before the Federal Court of Appeal (Docket # A-385-15).

15 A reassessment can also be made beyond the normal reassessment period pursuant to a waiver signed by the taxpayer in prescribed form.

17 The Queen v. Johnson, 2012 FCA 253.

18 On the standard of prudence, see also Balthazard v. The Queen, 2011 FCA 331.

the assessment or reassessed. The Tax Court of Canada is based in Ottawa and can sit basically anywhere in Canada, upon request of the taxpayer. It is composed of 22 judges, including the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice. The Tax Court is a superior court of record the judges of which are appointed by the Governor General in Council (i.e., the federal cabinet). Unlike the provincial superior courts, it does not have an inherent jurisdiction; in income tax appeals, its jurisdiction is limited to Section 171, which states that it may dispose of an appeal by dismissing it or allowing it and vacating the assessment, varying the assessment or referring the assessment back to the CRA for reconsideration and reassessment.<sup>19</sup>

The appeal is instituted by a notice of appeal prepared in accordance with Section 21 of the Rules of the Tax Court of Canada (General Procedure) (Rules).<sup>20</sup> The taxpayer's notice of appeal must summarise the relevant facts, state the question at issue, list the relevant statutory provisions relied upon, state the taxpayer's arguments and, finally, the reliefs sought.

Within 60 days (subject to an extension), the CRA has to file a reply to the notice of appeal in accordance with Sections 44–49 of the Rules. The reply contains the same items as the notice of appeal, in addition to a section containing the assumptions based on which the assessment was made by the CRA (the basis of the assessment). This section is of utmost importance to the whole tax litigation process, because the assumptions will determine what the taxpayer will have to demonstrate to quash the assessment.

Once the reply is filed, the parties have to agree on a timetable for the remaining steps of the litigation: the exchange of lists of documents (partial or integral),<sup>21</sup> the examination for discovery,<sup>22</sup> the satisfaction of undertakings made at discovery and the request for a date of hearing.<sup>23</sup> Once the date of hearing is scheduled by the hearings coordinator, the parties have 90 days from that date to serve their expert reports,<sup>24</sup> if they deem it necessary.

ii Burden of proof

Pursuant to Subsection 152(8) of the Income Tax Act, an assessment is deemed valid and can be vacated or varied only through the specific mechanisms provided for in the Act: objection, appeal or reassessment by the CRA. The assessment's presumption of validity is applicable notwithstanding any error, defect or omission in the assessment.

Once the assessment has been appealed to the Tax Court and the CRA has filed its reply, the debate on the validity of the assessment will focus on the assumptions specifically listed in the reply. Another facet of the assessment's presumption of validity is that the assumptions relied upon in the reply are presumed (and not deemed) valid. In the latter case, it is a simple presumption that can be countered by a prima facie case. The authority on this issue is Hickman Motors Ltd v. Canada,<sup>25</sup> in which the Supreme Court of Canada

19 The Tax Court has no jurisdiction on interest.

20 The Tax Court has several rules of practice, including an informal procedure. Only the general procedure is presented herein.

21 Sections 81–82 of the Rules.

22 Sections 92 et seq. of the Rules.

23 Section 123 of the Rules.

24 Sections 145 et seq. of the Rules. In tax appeals, experts are often called upon to testify on the following questions: accounting principles, forensic accounting, valuation, foreign law. See also Drouin v. The Queen, 2010 TCC 94 and R v. Mohan, (1994) 2 SCR 9.

25 Hickman Motors Ltd v. Canada, (1997) 2 SCR 336.

stated that the CRA, in making assessments, proceeds on assumptions, and the initial onus is on the taxpayer to demolish the CRA's assumptions in the assessment. The initial burden is only to demolish the exact assumptions made by the CRA but no more.<sup>26</sup> The initial onus of demolishing the assumptions is met where the taxpayer makes out a prima facie case. Where the CRA's assumptions have been demolished by the taxpayer, the onus then shifts to the CRA to rebut the prima facie case made out by the taxpayer and to prove the assumptions. If the CRA adduces no evidence, the taxpayer is entitled to succeed.

In Amiante Spec Inc v. The Queen,<sup>27</sup> the Federal Court of Appeal developed a little further the concept of prima facie case, stating that it is one supported by evidence that raises such a degree of probability in its favour that it must be accepted if believed by the judge unless it is rebutted or the contrary is proved. As such, it may be contrasted with conclusive evidence, which excludes the possibility of the truth of any other conclusion than the one established by that evidence.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Typically, interest and penalties are directly related to the imposition of taxes and have no autonomous standing. As such, the result of the tax appeal will normally be determinative for interest and penalties as well.<sup>28</sup>

However, some penalties imposed under the Income Tax Act are not applied automatically when an assessment is issued; rather, these penalties require proof of a specific behaviour of the person being reassessed. Subsection 163(2) applies to the taxpayer, while Section 163.2 applies to third parties, including tax professionals.

In Guindon v. Canada,<sup>29</sup> the Supreme Court of Canada had to consider the legal substance of the Section 163.2 penalty, and concluded that the standard for both penalties must be at least as high as gross negligence. These penalties are meant to capture serious conduct, not ordinary negligence or simple mistakes. Applying the traditional test developed

26 For historical background, see Johnston v. MNR, (1948) SCR 486.

27 Amiante Spec Inc v. The Queen, 2009 FCA 139.

28 Pursuant to Subsection 220(3.1) of the Income Tax Act, the Minister of National Revenue may, upon request from the taxpayer, waive or cancel, partially or totally, interest and penalties applied to the taxes assessed. The Minister's discretion is exercised administratively in accordance with guidelines published by the CRA. It is subject to judicial review before the Federal Court in accordance with administrative law principles. Based on Dunsmuir v. NB, (2008) 1 SCR 190, the Minister's decision must be reasonable and legally correct. For a comprehensive review of the relevant case law, see Lafarge v. Quebec, 2011 QCCS 7391. In Genetec Inc v. Quebec, 2015 QCCS 4877, the Quebec Superior Court concluded that a taxpayer has no constitutional guarantee to a reasonable decision and, accordingly, the provincial legislature could enact laws to restrict the ability of the Superior Court to revisit the ministerial decision. This case is under appeal before the Quebec Court of Appeal: 2016 QCCA 444.

29 Guindon v. Canada, 2015 SCC 41.

in Venne v. The Queen,<sup>30</sup> the Supreme Court said that these penalties are intended to apply to a behaviour that amounts to indifference as to whether the law is complied with and a high degree of negligence tantamount to intentional acting.

Pursuant to Section 163(3), in the case of penalties assessed under Subsections 163(2) and Section 163.2, the burden of establishing the facts justifying the assessments of the gross negligence penalties is on the CRA, on the balance of probabilities.<sup>31</sup>

i Notice of objection

Once a notice of assessment is issued, pursuant to Subsection 165(1) of the Income Tax Act, the taxpayer has 90 days from the date of mailing (presumably, the date on the notice of assessment) to file an objection. There is no prescribed form, but the Act requires that the objection be in writing, and that it sets out the reasons for the objection and the relevant facts.

An important exception to this apparent flexibility in preparing notices of objection is with respect to large corporations. Pursuant to Subsection 165(1.11), a large corporation's<sup>32</sup> notice of objection must reasonably describe each issue to be decided, specify in respect of each issue the relief sought expressed as the amount of a change in a balance, and provide facts and reasons relied on by the corporation in respect of each issue.<sup>33</sup> Failure to comply with these rules may result in the rejection of the notice of objection (there is a 60-day grace period) or the legal impossibility to appeal an issue not validly raised in the notice of objection.

Pursuant to Subsection 165(3), on receipt of the notice of objection, the CRA shall, with all due dispatch, reconsider the assessment and vacate, confirm or vary the assessment or reassess. The taxpayer must be notified in writing.

The objection process is not mandatory and can be bypassed. What is required per se is the notice of objection, but if 90 days have elapsed after service of the notice of objection and the CRA has not notified the taxpayer that it has vacated or confirmed the assessment or reassessed, the taxpayer can appeal directly to the Tax Court of Canada, pursuant to Paragraph 169(1)(b).

ii Loss determination request

An assessment should not be confused with a notice of assessment. Pursuant to Subsection 152(1) of the Income Tax Act, the assessment is the administrative act made by the CRA pursuant to which it establishes the amount of tax payable as well as penalties and interest applicable thereto. The notice of assessment is the piece of paper intended to convey the result to the taxpayer. The separation between the administrative act and the physical support 31 See also Fourney v. The Queen, 2011 TCC 520 and Lacroix v. Canada, 2008 FCA 241.

32 Pursuant to Section 225.1(8), a corporation is a large corporation if, at the end of a given taxation year, its taxable capital employed in Canada exceeds C$10 million.

33 For the historical background on the reason for these requirements, see Potash Corp of Saskatchewan v. The Queen, (2004) 2 CTC 91 (FCA).

may seem trivial, except for in the situation where a taxpayer receives a notice of assessment with respect to a taxation year during which it incurred a loss. The amount of tax established under the circumstances will be nil and, legally speaking, there is no assessment under those circumstances.

Since losses can be carried back and forward to reduce taxable income for previous and subsequent taxation years, there is an incentive to confirm the quantum of the losses for each taxation year. In this regard, the notice of assessment is of no use. What is required is a notice of determination of losses that can be issued by the CRA upon a request made pursuant to Subsection 152(1.1), typically through a letter. If the quantum of the losses determined by the CRA in furtherance of this process is inaccurate, an objection can be filed in essentially the same manner as an objection to an assessment.<sup>34</sup>

iii Request for extension of time

Where no notice of objection to an assessment has been served within the 90-day period, the taxpayer may apply to the CRA to extend the time for serving the notice of objection. Pursuant to Section 166.1 of the Income Tax Act, the request should be granted if it complies with the following conditions: the application is made within one year after the expiration of the deadline to serve the notice of objection, the taxpayer demonstrates that he or she was unable to act within the deadline or had a bona fide intention to object within the deadline, it is just and equitable to grant the application, and the application was made as soon as circumstances permitted.

The key issue in most applications for extension of time is whether the taxpayer was unable to act. In Patterson Dental Canada Inc v. The Queen,<sup>35</sup> the Tax Court of Canada confirmed that the concept of impossibility to act must be analysed subjectively and not objectively: in other words, whether this specific taxpayer in his or her specific context was unable to act, as opposed to the reasonably prudent taxpayer.

If the CRA rejects the application, the taxpayer can appeal to the Tax Court of Canada.

VI COSTS

Pursuant to Subsection 147(1) of the Rules, the court may determine the amount of the costs of all parties involved in any proceeding, the allocation of those costs and the persons required to pay them. Costs may be awarded to or against the CRA. In exercising its discretionary power to award costs, the court may consider, inter alia, the result of the proceeding, the amounts in issue, the importance of the issues, any offer of settlement made in writing, the volume of work, the complexity of the issues, and the conduct of any party that tended to shorten or lengthen unnecessarily the duration of the proceeding.

Unless otherwise ordered by the court, if a taxpayer makes an offer of settlement and obtains a judgment as favourable as or more favourable than the terms of the offer of settlement, the appellant is entitled to party and party costs to the date of service of the offer and substantial indemnity costs after that date, as determined by the court, plus reasonable disbursements and applicable taxes. ‘Substantial indemnity’ costs means 80 per cent of solicitor and client costs.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Taxation is proverbially complex, and mistakes do happen in spite of the taxpayers’ and their advisers’ best efforts to comply with their obligations. When a series of transactions was intended to respect the conditions provided for in the Income Tax Act to take advantage of a specific tax treatment, or when a transaction was otherwise intended to be legitimately tax-neutral and unintended tax consequences are triggered by a mistake in the design or implementation of the transactions, taxpayers should consider the possibility of an application to rectify the erroneous writings.

Such applications are made before provincial superior courts and are governed by civil law in Quebec and common law in the rest of Canada. In civil law, the authority is the Supreme Court of Canada’s judgment in Quebec v. Services environnementaux AES Inc.<sup>36</sup> This case stands for the principle that, as a general rule, the writing is not an autonomous act; the writing is not the contract. A contract is an agreement of wills for the purpose of carrying out juridical operations. The formation of a contract is subject to the principle of consensualism: a contract is formed by the exchange of consents. Therefore, to determine what are the bona fide legal relationships to which tax consequences will apply, one must go beyond the allegedly erroneous writing and focus on the parties’ common intention. If a writing contains an error that triggers unintended tax consequences,<sup>37</sup> the court must, once the error is proved in accordance with the rules of evidence in civil matters, note the error and ensure that it is remedied. Most importantly, the Supreme Court ruled that the tax authorities do not have an acquired right to benefit from an error made by the parties to a contract after the parties have corrected the error by mutual consent.<sup>38</sup>

As for common law, the Supreme Court of Canada has yet to hear a case that would establish the applicable rules definitely.<sup>39</sup> Meanwhile, the generally accepted authority is the Ontario Court of Appeal’s Canada v. Juliar case,<sup>40</sup> according to which a party seeking rectification is not required to have determined the precise mechanics or means by which the 36 Quebec v. Services environnementaux AES Inc., (2013) SCR 838.

37 An error is defined at Paragraph 53 of AES as the erroneous expression of the parties’ common intention in all the writings prepared to carry out the tax plans on which they had agreed.

38 At Paragraph 54 of its reasons in AES, the Supreme Court of Canada mentioned that the judicial recognition of rectification in civil law should not be viewed as an invitation to engage in bold tax planning on the assumption that taxpayers will always be allowed to redo their contracts retroactively should that planning fail.

39 The Supreme Court of Canada has granted leave to appeal in Groupe Jean Coutu (PJC) Inc v. Canada (Docket #36505), a civil law case and Canada v. Fairmont Hotels Inc (Docket # 36606), a common law case, two rectification cases that were heard together on 18 May 2016 (judgment reserved).

40 Canada v. Juliar, (2000) 50 OR (3d) 728.

party's settled intention to achieve a specific tax outcome would be realised. Rather, Juliar stands for the principle that the critical requirement for rectification is proof of a continuing specific intention to undertake a transaction on a particular tax basis.

i Construction of tax statutes

In Canada, as a result of the Duke of Westminster principle,<sup>41</sup> taxpayers are entitled to arrange their affairs to minimise the amount of tax otherwise payable. This principle has been consistently recognised in case law<sup>42</sup> as well as by the CRA.<sup>43</sup> In Canada, there is no substance over form doctrine pursuant to which a series of transactions could be revisited by the CRA to ignore the transactions implemented specifically to avoid or minimise taxes. The way in which taxes are applied to transactions has been developed over a series of cases, as described below.

In Shell Canada Ltd v. Canada,<sup>44</sup> the Supreme Court of Canada stated that the economic realities of a situation cannot be used to re-characterise a taxpayer's bona fide legal relationships. Absent a specific provision of the Income Tax Act to the contrary or a finding that they are a sham, the taxpayer's legal relationships must be respected in tax cases.

Re-characterisation is only permissible if the label attached by the taxpayer to the particular transaction does not properly reflect its actual legal effect. The authority on this question is Continental Bank Leasing Corp v. Canada,<sup>45</sup> in which the Supreme Court of Canada established the following approach. After it has been found that the sham doctrine does not apply,<sup>46</sup> it is necessary to examine the documents outlining the transaction to determine whether the parties have satisfied the requirements of creating the legal relationships that they sought to create. Once the documents are accepted as genuinely representing the transaction into which the parties have entered, its proper legal categorisation is a matter of construction of the documents. The parties' agreement must be found, first, in the language used by the parties. However, if, when properly construed, the effect of the document as a whole is inconsistent with the terminology used by the parties, then ill-chosen language must yield to the substance.

The seminal exercise of determination of the bona fide legal relationships cannot be made in abstracto. It can only be made within the context of the laws of general application (common law, civil law, corporate law, international law, etc.) based on which the legal relationships emerge. Markevich v. Canada<sup>47</sup> recognises the principle that the Income Tax Act is not a complete code and, accordingly, it must be informed by laws of general application. In other words, the Act does not and cannot operate in a legislative vacuum; it relies implicitly on the general law. As a result, the exercise of determination of the bona fide legal relationships commanded by the Supreme Court of Canada in Shell and Continental Bank must take into account legal concepts that are outside the Act and that may require a reconciliation of legal concepts that have nothing to do with tax (e.g., contract law, trust law or bankruptcy law).

ii Tax avoidance

Although the Duke of Westminster principle is still trite law, taxpayers wishing to arrange their affairs to minimise the amount of Canadian tax otherwise payable must be aware of an important exception to the rule: abusive tax avoidance.

The general anti-avoidance rule (GAAR) enacted in 1988 in Section 245 of the Income Tax Act recognises the principle that the particularity and detail of many tax provisions have often led to an emphasis on textual interpretation and, as a result, where parliament has specified precisely what conditions must be satisfied to achieve a particular result, it is reasonable to assume that parliament intended that taxpayers would rely on such provisions to achieve the result they prescribe. However, this remains true only if the transactions entered into by the taxpayer had bona fide purposes (other than obtaining a tax benefit) and the series of transactions do not amount to a misuse or abuse of the Act.

According to the Supreme Court of Canada in Canada Trustco Mortgage Co v. Canada,<sup>48</sup> three requirements must be established to permit the application of the GAAR:

- a* a tax benefit resulting from a transaction or part of a series of transactions;
- b* the transaction is an avoidance transaction in the sense that it cannot be said to have been reasonably undertaken primarily for a bona fide purpose other than to obtain a tax benefit; and
- c* there was abusive tax avoidance in the sense that it cannot be reasonably concluded that a tax benefit would be consistent with the object, spirit and purpose of the provisions relied upon by the taxpayer.

The burden is on the taxpayer to refute the existence of a tax benefit and of an avoidance transaction (essentially, questions of facts), and on the CRA to establish the existence of abusive tax avoidance (a question of law).

This rather complex exercise must take place in accordance with the modern approach to the construction of statutes, pursuant to which the interpretation of a statutory provision must be made according to a textual, contextual and purposive analysis to find a meaning that is harmonious with the Act read as a whole.

Once it is established that the GAAR is applicable, its effects are serious. Pursuant to Subsection 245(5), the CRA can re-characterise the series of transactions so as to suppress the tax benefit.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

Canada currently has double taxation treaties in force with 92 countries.<sup>49</sup> Six treaties are signed but not yet in force.<sup>50</sup> Six treaties are under negotiation or renegotiation.<sup>51</sup>

Canada also has tax information exchange agreements with 22 countries.<sup>52</sup>

One treaty is signed but not yet in force (Cook Islands). Seven treaties are currently under negotiation.<sup>53</sup>

Canada has adopted the OECD treaty model.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Three areas of focus should be closely watched in the coming years.

The first area is the CRA's growing appetite for tax information. In recent years, we have seen a growing number of mandatory requirements by the CRA to obtain tax information, including requests sent to tax professionals and third parties (including financial institutions and retailers). Allocation of human resources seems to be an issue, and the CRA intends to carry out its audits more efficiently. As a result, it is clear that access to planning memoranda and tax opinions prepared by professionals are prime targets and may even become road maps for tax auditors. This new trend raises important issues, including the taxpayers' legitimate expectation of confidentiality when they deal with their tax advisers, as well as the duty of loyalty in relation to one's clients.

Secondly, significant developments in the law of rectification are expected in 2017. The possibility to correct mistakes that trigger unintended tax consequences was recognised by the Supreme Court of Canada in the AES case in 2013. Now the time has come to go a step further and establish nationwide guidelines to determine when rectification is or is not legitimate once the mistake has been proven.

Finally, we have seen a significant increase in the number of taxpayers' complaints against tax auditors' reprehensible behaviours.<sup>54</sup> With the passage of time, we can only hope for clear guidelines – especially from the courts – so that such behaviours are no longer tolerated.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

The Canadian tax system is a mature and equitable system for both Canadian taxpayers and the tax authorities. The system is administered by professional public servants dedicated to ensure that taxpayers file truthful returns, voluntarily. It is adjudicated by an independent and efficient judiciary that we can be proud of. In years to come, we will see further improvements in our system. The construction of a penalty system based on Guindon is expected, as is the possible unification of the rectification process and the continuing evolution of confidentiality rules. This is just an excerpt of what may happen in the coming years.

CHILE

Patricio Silva-Riesco Ojeda and Arturo Selman Nahum<sup>1</sup>

I INTRODUCTION

The Chilean Internal Revenue Service (IRS) is the fiscal authority responsible for implementing and monitoring all local taxes, fiscal or otherwise, as long as the state has an interest in said taxes and control of these is not specifically mandated by law to a different authority. Tax disputes were formerly also under the faculties of the IRS, which acted as a first instance court through its regional directors, who not only acted as tax judges, but also as the administrative authority from which any contested act emerged.

The second instance fell under the competence of the Chilean Court of Appeals (an ordinary appeals court), whose ruling could be challenged before the Supreme Court through an extraordinary appeal on points of law. However, dispute resolution regarding taxes has undergone great changes over the past decade. First, as a tax dispute system formerly carried out by the regional directors of the IRS, the directors acted as tax judges; moreover, their jurisdictional faculties were commonly delegated to third parties such as lower-ranking public officers. This situation eventually led to a series of inapplicability procedures in particular cases, as well as the subsequent declaration of unconstitutionality by the Constitutional Court. As a consequence, the delegating faculties of the IRS were absolutely repealed, directly relocating the above-mentioned jurisdictional faculties back to the regional directors.

Pressure to modify the tax jurisdiction's procedure and management structure resulted in the enactment of Act No. 20,322, enforceable since 27 January 2009. Said legislation gave rise to the most significant fundamental taxation reform in Chile since 1960. This act created independent and sovereign courts, known as tax and customs courts, thus replacing the IRS' jurisdictional authority, held for decades, with an independent third party that no longer represents an entity capable of acting simultaneously both as an interested party and judge.

Under the above-mentioned Act, 18 tax and customs courts were created, four of which were installed in Santiago. These courts rule over taxpayers' claims against any and all actions and proceedings of both the IRS and the National Customs Service. Therefore, the tax dispute system has become one in which taxpayers can fairly challenge the tax authority in terms of tax assessments and offences.

The installation of these courts was undertaken progressively in four major stages. Prior to the installation of the courts in Santiago, Congress estimated that the courts were overstaffed and, against specialists' warnings, proceeded to order staff reductions. This has resulted in extremely slow judicial proceedings and overburdened courts throughout regions with very dense populations.

Meanwhile, questions regarding the IRS' use of its discretionary powers, such as criminal prosecution and remission, and its discharge faculties over taxes and penalties, has resulted in the early departure of several IRS directors and sub-directors. As a result, there is an increasing tendency among IRS officials to avoid the administrative settlement of tax disputes, and instead to opt for their judicialisation.

Notwithstanding the above, and despite the existing increase in tax judicialisation, auditing is not conducted as frequently as it once was due, inter alia, to union-based pressure within the IRS, and, furthermore, given the lack of stability regarding its authorities.

In turn, the major 2014 tax reform, which will come completely into force in 2017, has incorporated general anti-avoidance rules. The application of said rules should increase litigation, although the drafting of the rights-based rules enables us to predict that the IRS will avoid said judicialisation, and decide instead on alternative formulae.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Tax disputes normally arise when a taxpayer challenges a positive tax ascertainment, an IRS ruling or an offence notice. In exceptional cases, when facing conduct that constitutes a tax-related criminal offence, the IRS will choose to solely file an administrative complaint, forwarding all records to the tax and customs court for trial and ruling. Regarding offences, a dispute begins when the taxing administration, acting in its auditing capacity, notifies the taxpayer of an offence – usually sanctioned through fines or the shutting down of an establishment – regarding non-compliance of document issuance duties, the upkeep of records or other fiscal obligations. The notified offence may be sanctioned administratively should the taxpayer admit to the offence, and may also request the discharge of fines, even if done electronically. Should the taxpayer file a claim, the trial of and ruling on the notified offence will fall to the first instance court, with an or appeal being allowed before the relevant city's court of appeals.

Litigation may result from, inter alia, a fiscal audit resulting in a founded tax authority resolution. This is referred to as liquidation, an administrative act that is often contested before the tax and customs courts.

In turn, any taxpayer who has overpaid certain tax will be entitled to request its return from the tax administration. The ruling regarding said administrative request can also be contested. The same applies for rulings that partially or completely deny requests for refunds, whether based on special laws or laws that promote an activity, such as in the case of export VAT, a change in the VAT subject or a refund of the VAT endured in the acquisition of fixed assets, as well as requests for the return of taxing remnants formulated in income tax return forms. In turn, if an IRS audit determines that a loss claimed by a taxpayer is excessive, it will render a decision to modify said claim. All the aforementioned decisions may be contested before the tax and customs courts.

The procedure contemplated by law for said disputes is contentious and administrative, and, after an examination of a dispute's admissibility, calls for the serving of a notice to the IRS for an answer to the complaint, followed by probationary and ruling periods. Said ruling is subject to appeal before the respective court of appeals within 15 business days, and a ruling regarding an appeal may be contested through an extraordinary appeal on points of law before the Supreme Court.

The deadline to present claims against liquidations, transfers, payments or rulings of the IRS is 90 business days. Said period may be extended to a year should the taxpayer, within the 90-day period, request a transfer and pay the corresponding taxes so as to avoid readjustments, fines and interests. Taxing interest applies at a rate of 1.5 per cent per month, and fines may rise up to 60 per cent of the readjusted taxes. By making use of the allowed advance payment, a taxpayer reduces the risks associated with litigation and, should a ruling be favourable to the taxpayer, the amounts paid are to be refunded with a readjusted interest rate of 0.5 per cent per month in favour of the taxpayer.

Both the taxpayer and the IRS must be represented in court by a licensed attorney, and no consignment whatsoever is required for litigation, notwithstanding the aforementioned right. Nonetheless, in cases regarding amounts of less than 32 monthly tax units,<sup>2</sup> the taxpayer may appear in court without attorney representation. The general claims procedure before a tax and customs court (at first instance) will take approximately one to two years, although such period may increase if a dispute is brought before courts with competence in Santiago.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i IRS administrative stage

Summons

An inspection or tax audit begins with a request to a taxpayer for all his or her records. If the records are insufficient, the IRS may issue a summons,<sup>3</sup> after which the taxpayer must clarify, rectify, extend or confirm his or her tax filing within a month.<sup>4</sup>

The response to the summons must be in writing. Should the arguments and records provided by the taxpayer be deemed sufficient, the challenged entries will be reconciled, and the fiscal authority will issue an end of review notice letter. Otherwise, the IRS will dictate a liquidation or tax transfer where taxes are owed by the taxpayer, or will issue an exempt ruling destined to either deny the return requested by the taxpayer or to modify a tax loss.

Particular care must be observed in attaching all requested records when responding to a summons. Act No. 20,322 incorporated a norm of proof inadmissibility (the discovery

2 Equivalent to approximately US$2,260.

3 Although the summons is optional, and hence it would be natural to conclude that it is seldom used, the law makes it mandatory in many cases, making it a tool recurrently used by the tax authority.

4 Such deadline may be extended up to one more month upon the taxpayer's request.

effect) by virtue of which, should the taxpayer not attach to the summons response all the documents specifically requested, the taxpayer will not be able to make use of said documents during a trial.

Administrative motion for reversal

Once the liquidation, tax transfer or ruling that affects the payment of taxes is issued, provision No. 123-bis of the Tax Code allows the taxpayer, within 15 business days,<sup>5</sup> to file an administrative motion for reversal before the IRS. The IRS will have 50 business days<sup>6</sup> from the filing of said motion to make a ruling and, should the motion not be resolved within this period, it will be considered denied.

This constitutes the last stage of formal review by the tax authority and, although the standing administrative regulation<sup>7</sup> makes the review of all records provided by a taxpayer mandatory, even allowing for conciliation, this path has not had the impact expected; nor has it served as a mechanism to avoid the judicialisation we currently face. This is due, presumably, to the tight deadline provided to make a ruling on administrative motions for reversals filed by taxpayers. Consequently, Congress is currently debating a bill that, inter alia, would extend the deadline to file and rule over an administrative motion for reversal from 30 to 90 business days, respectively, in addition to suspending the deadline during said period for the filing of tax claims before the tax and customs courts.

ii Tax and customs courts

The tax and customs courts are entrusted with the jurisdictional function of ruling, in the first instance, over disputes between the IRS or the National Customs Service and taxpayers. In accordance with Act No. 20,322, said courts are independent, under the Ministry of Finance, through an Administrative Unit that is in charge of the courts' economic and administrative management (as with the judicial power, without being dependent on the latter).

The tax and customs courts are single-judge courts, and their judges are appointed through a competitive bidding process. In this process, an executive service proposes a list of candidates for judging posts to the relevant court of appeals, and the court will then propose a slate of three to the President for appointment. These judges will be fixed in their position and keep their posts until they reach the age of 75, and may only be dismissed on serious grounds.

These courts were installed throughout the country in a progressive manner that ended in February 2013. There are 18 single-judge tax and customs courts, each with a secretary (attesting minister) and resolution and administrative staff. There is one court per region and four for the metropolitan region, and they closely follow the organic structure maintained by the tax administration at a national level. Hence, these courts currently function with attorneys who are exclusively dedicated to them.

Most of these attorneys come from the taxing administration itself and, although they are not a part of the judicial power, they still exercise jurisdiction. Courts' officers are not only 5 Such deadline is established under Act No. 19,880 (Monday to Friday, not including Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays).

6 Idem.

7 Circular Resolution No. 13 of 2010, the instructions of which are mandatory for all IRS officials.

fixed in a ministerial nature, but also due to the non-existent possibility of their promotion or change relative to their careers within the structure. Nonetheless, these courts are subject to the directive, correctional and economic constitutional supervision of the Supreme Court.

These courts rule, in the first instance, on all claims from taxpayers against IRS actions, particularly those consisting of tax liquidations, tax transfers and payments, rulings, complaints and offences, under procedures whose central characteristics were modified to make this process one of a litigious tax nature. The following characteristics of the process are the most notable.

Deadlines to file claims before the tax and customs courts will depend on the act being contested, a situation that will also determine the procedure to be followed.

In most procedures, attorney representation is required, notwithstanding that already stated regarding cases whose amount does not exceed 32 monthly tax units.

The trial will constitute an adversarial procedure, meaning that all acts contested by taxpayers shall be defended accordingly by specialised attorneys of either the National Customs Service or the IRS.

The IRS may request a tax and customs court to issue a cautionary action consisting of a prohibition to celebrate acts or contracts over specific goods or rights belonging to a taxpayer to ensure the eventual payment of debt.

The court will call upon the taxpayer to present evidence regarding material, contested and pertinent facts, assessing said facts' probative value according to the rules of reasoned judgement.

Taxpayers may not present, as evidence in trial, records requested during the IRS audit that were not surrendered in due time.

Likewise, the courts shall try and rule over requests by the IRS for the lifting of banking secrecy, as well as over the special procedure regarding violation of rights by the taxing administration – by reason of infringement – of a taxpayer's rights or constitutional guarantees.

By virtue of the modifications introduced by Act No. 20,780 and Act. No. 20,899, the courts will try any requests made by the IRS regarding the abuse or simulation of legal transactions celebrated by a taxpayer in compliance with the procedure established by provision No. 160-bis of the Tax Code.

iii Courts of appeals

Rulings of the tax and customs courts are appealable before the courts of appeals as second instance collegiate jurisdictional bodies. Although the law contemplated the creation of specialised chambers for ruling tax matters in the country's main courts, during President Sebastián Piñera's administration, a bill was passed that disposed of said specialisation before it was completely carried out, keeping such chamber only in the Court of Appeals of Santiago. In the remaining second instance courts, trials and ruling over appeals against tax and customs courts' decisions fall under non-specialised chambers. The courts of appeals, in appeal procedures, may modify facts and law established and applied in the first instance.

iv Supreme Court

Rulings passed by the courts of appeals may be subject to extraordinary appeals on points of law before the Supreme Court. If a recourse is filed based on form, then it claims that there has been a violation of substantive procedural laws. On the other hand, if filed based on substance, then it claims that an error of law took place that essentially affects the operative provisions of the judgment. The Supreme Court is the country's highest court that tries and rules through chambers, each composed of five ministers of the highest hierarchical range. Currently, these remedies are resolved by the chamber specialised in criminal matters.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

In Chile, criminal tax offences are matters of private criminal prosecution; hence, actions against such offences fall exclusively under the IRS. The only way in which a judicial proceeding regarding tax criminal offences may start is through the formulation of a criminal complaint by the tax administration. This faculty keeps the IRS authorities under constant media fire, given, inter alia, the IRS' failure to file claims against tax crimes, its uneven responses regarding equal offences and the slow response of its authorities.

Questioning regarding the IRS always relates to the alleged political use of the above-mentioned faculty, and to the disputes that rise between the body constitutionally mandated to lead such investigation, the Public Prosecution Ministry, and the IRS, the latter enabling the former by way of filing a corresponding criminal claim.

Regarding the above, it should be noted that, in Chile, offences against tax legislation are classified into three types depending on the nature of the sanction that the law establishes for the offence: violation, crime or an offence of mixed nature. In all these situations, Chilean law does not establish sanctions consisting of deprivation or restriction of liberty.

A procedure is started before a tax and customs court, which shall sanction the corresponding fine. Within said procedure, an offender has access to diverse mechanisms for defence. Criminal tax offences are solely those found within Provision 97 No. 24 of the Tax Code. In such case, all records and information are to be turned over to the Director of the IRS, who will decide to either file the criminal claim or to archive the case. However, the cases that hold utmost interest are those of a mixed nature, being offences that the law sanctions with both a penalty payment (fine), as well as a sanction that deprives or restricts the taxpayer of his or her freedom (imprisonment, confinement or relegation). In this case, once it is established from the gathering of information and evidence that there are tax irregularities, the findings will be presented to the Director of the IRS, who will decide whether to file a criminal claim or to forward the case to the corresponding regional bureau. The latter will have to pursue the application of the corresponding penalty payment through the appropriate penal law channels, all in accordance with Provision No. 162 Section 3 of the Tax Code. In recent years, and regarding criminal matters, the IRS has increased the number of criminal claims filed before justice courts based on acts that constitute criminal tax offences. This situation has come about given the prosecution of new criminal offences that have progressively been introduced into the Criminal Code, starting in 2001, as well as due to the permanent increase of the number of attorneys within the IRS.

Likewise, the fact that investigations are carried out by the prosecutors of the Public Prosecution Ministry – under the supervision of guarantee judges<sup>8</sup> – has brought about the progressive shortening of the duration of investigations, as well as of dispute resolution, in many cases leading to alternative outlets (inter alia, such as conditional suspension, reparatory agreements, summary procedures) instead of starting an oral trial.

8 Translator's note: 'Juez de Garantía' is particular to Chile; the closest figure in common law would be 'magistrate judge'.

In addition to traditional tax offences, such as tax evasion (intentional failure to pay taxes), credit fraud (attaching of false invoices so as to increase VAT fiscal credits) and the malicious acquisition of tax returns (such as in the case of export VAT or tax returns due to tax losses), since 2001, new criminal offences have been incorporated into the Tax Code, including the following:

- a* facilitating or surrendering of false invoices or other tax documents;
- b* surrendering of false information to the IRS;
- c* malicious acquisition of compensation from donation beneficiaries;
- d* tax fraud within systems of exemption (free trade zones); and
- e* intentional loss of tax documentation.

i Recovering overpaid tax

Provision No. 126 of the Tax Code contemplates the possibility of requesting, before the IRS, the return of taxes based on correcting a taxpayer's errors; acquiring restitutions of sums paid twice, excessively, or in an undue manner in terms of taxes, readjustments, interests and fines; and restitution of burdens mandated by promotion laws or tax exemptions. The deadline to file return requests based on the aforementioned cases is three years after the date on which the act or event that serves as grounds for the request took place.

Should the return request be denied by the IRS, the ruling containing said rejection may be contested before the tax and customs courts in accordance with the procedure set forth by Title III, Paragraph ii, and, furthermore, should said claim also be denied, said rejection may be challenged, as appropriate, before a court of appeals or the Supreme Court.

In turn, provision No. 128 of the Tax Code establishes that amounts unduly transferred or increased, or paid in excess by taxpayers in terms of taxes, will enter the state coffers, denying taxpayers the possibility to request their return, unless it is reliably proven before the Director of the IRS that said amounts were restituted in favour of those who actually endured the undue burden.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Provision No. 26 of the Tax Code contemplates a safeguard rule in favour of taxpayers by virtue of which, if a taxpayer performed a certain act protected by a previous decision issued by the fiscal authority, no tax chargebacks may be collected against said taxpayer. The above will apply as long as the taxpayer has acted in good faith, based on an official interpretation made by the Director of the IRS or by the regional directors, and in applying said interpretation to a comparable situation. The above stated stands as long as such interpretation is recognised in circular resolutions, judgments, reports or any other official document destined to issue instructions.

Notwithstanding the above, in the event that the IRS considers that a taxpayer acted under a declaration that does not apply to his or her particular situation, and as long as a decision is passed through which a liquidation, tax transfer or resolution is issued regarding payment of taxes, the taxpayer may file a claim before the tax and customs courts, in accordance with Title III, Paragraph ii. Furthermore, should said claim also be denied, a taxpayer may challenge the decision before the corresponding appeals court or the Supreme Court, as appropriate.

iii Claimants

In compliance with Provision No. 124 of the Tax Code, anyone with an actual interest may file a claim against a liquidation, tax transfer, payment or resolution that may affect the payment of a tax, or that affects the elements that serve to determine said payment. In general, it will be the recipient of the administrative act who shall file a claim, but this does not prevent others from filing claims, as long as they have an actual interest regarding the administrative act. However, given that the act will be notified to the affected party (the taxpayer), it is difficult for a situation to present itself in which a third party may challenge an act, even if he or she has an actual interest, given that said third party will not know about the existence and content of the act.

VI COSTS

In Chile, the challenging of an act by the fiscal authority before the tax and customs courts has no associated costs; nor are there associated costs for filing appeals before the appeals court or in filing extraordinary appeals on points of law before the Supreme Court. Nonetheless, in the first and second instance, as with the filing of recourses before the Supreme Court, the losing party may be sentenced to pay all personal legal expenses relative to attorneys' fees, as well as all procedural costs such as experts' reports requested by the taxpayer, should the taxpayer lose the trial. In Chile, procedural expenses do not include the judge's fees, but do include those of other personnel employed in the administration of justice such as process servers, whose functions, in general terms (which does not apply to tax claims), include notifying lawsuits, rulings and carrying out repossessions.

However, there are no uniform or mandatory criteria to guide judges in their fixing of attorneys' fees or court costs that the IRS, as a losing party, may be sentenced to pay (and they rarely cover taxpayers' actual expenses). The courts will usually set a very low amount for the payment of costs, which will either equate to a low percentage of the contested amount (1 per cent or, should the contested amount be of higher value, will be set by other random mechanisms).

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

During the auditing stage before the IRS, the usual way in which disputes are solved is the voluntary or forcible surrendering of omitted declarations, or the rectification of surrendered declarations, so as to complete the payment of any remaining taxes. During this stage, it is possible for the auditors to partially go over taxpayers' justifications so they can end their auditing promptly, and acquire payment of the debt. The IRS has the necessary facilities to partially or completely remit interest and fines associated with the non-payment or the untimely payment of taxes, which is an efficient tool in many cases where surcharges may increase, or even double, the original debt.

However, and in administrative proceedings, should rectification or surrendering of tax declarations by taxpayers not be carried out in a satisfactory manner according to the IRS, then the IRS will have to reasonably determine what differentials to impose, whether through liquidation, tax transfer or resolutions, which, once notified to the taxpayer, may be accepted or challenged before the competent tax and customs court.

Prior to the jurisdictional claim, the taxpayer may file an administrative motion for reversal before the fiscal authority to correct errors or infringements of requirements in contested acts. This instance contemplates the possibility of carrying out a conciliation hearing.

In these hearings, the administration may partially agree to the modification of the taxpayer's claims, issue different levels of surcharge remission, agree to the surrendering of rectification declarations, as well as take any other measures.

There is no alternative system to solve tax disputes within the jurisdictional procedure. However, a bill is currently being discussed in Congress that would incorporate, within the actual judicial procedure, a mandatory formality consisting of conciliation before a tax and customs judge.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

In Chile, tax evasion – an offence subject to private criminal prosecution – falls exclusively under the power of the Director of the IRS. Consequently, the taxing administration is permanently questioned over the manner in which it exercises the above-stated power. Tax criminal offences are of a mixed nature, given that their sanction is both deprivation and restriction of liberty and, conjointly, of a monetary nature. Given this, and considering all the gathered elements, the tax authority may opt to deem the offence as one that warrants a criminal claim, in which case the investigation and later application of both sanctions will be carried out by the Public Prosecution Ministry; or the tax authority may choose to merely serve notice of an administrative claim, so that the tax and customs courts may trial said claim, sanctioning it solely with a penalty payment.

However, in the majority of cases, the possibility remains that the IRS may choose not to file a claim to start a criminal or administrative procedure regarding tax evasion. Instead, it may choose to merely collect the civil payment of eluded taxes. Said civil collection of payment is carried out through the issuance of a liquidation or tax transfer, as is appropriate. In any case, the collecting of taxes and the corresponding sanction carried by evasion follow separate and parallel paths.

The fact that the gathering of records and information is entrusted to the IRS, so as to subsequently denounce offences before the Public Prosecution Ministry, results in the situation faced in Chile in which the filing of tax evasion claims barely exceeds 100 claims a year, hence shifting human and economic resources from their natural auditing function to one of criminal investigation.

In recent years, the IRS has been subject to political questioning and has been seen in constant conflict with the Public Prosecution Ministry due to the committing of criminal tax offences regarding political financing. The IRS has been accused of unnecessarily omitting or delaying the corresponding filing of claims.

Notwithstanding the above, and outside the criminal scope, through the enactment of Tax Reform Act No. 20,780 a general anti-evasion rule was incorporated that has been in force since 30 September 2015. This rule radically changed the Chilean system in which, historically, if the legislator detected recurring evasive manoeuvres by taxpayers, it would call for the norm's particular correction through specific and concrete measures.

The general anti-evasion rule has brought about a change in paradigm. Therefore, even though Act No. 20,899 has cleared up certain questions that remained regarding the scope of the applicability of said rule over acts or contracts celebrated before 30 September 2015, the anti-evasion rule still poses several uncertainties in its application. For instance, there are still questions regarding whether this rule could have eventually overwritten the existing evasion criminal provision, or which criterion should be considered for an act or a contract generating relevant 'economic or legal effects' due to the broad wording used within the legal definition of the latter effects.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

Chile has subscribed to a considerable number of DTTs, following the OECD's model with certain deviations towards the UN's model. Currently, Chile has 25 DTTs in force, as well as six DTTs that it has subscribed to but that are not yet in force. Regarding the latter, the DTT subscribed in 2010 with the US stands out, being a treaty that, after five years of internal procedures within both countries, is on the verge of coming into force.

Furthermore, the new DTT subscribed to by Chile and Argentina, after the last was overruled by Argentina, entered into force in both countries on 1 January 2017.

Interpretation issues come about through the application of the above-mentioned treaties, and, furthermore, having exhausted all mechanisms contemplated by a treaty itself, the IRS has made use of the commentaries to the OECD's model. The use of said commentaries is based on those stated in Provisions No. 31 and 32 of the Vienna Convention regarding the Law of Treaties, yet a proviso to the effect that no uniformity exists within administrative declarations regarding a treaty's binding force is in place.<sup>9</sup> However, the OECD's model and its commentaries are a valid source for the interpretation of DTTs in addition to the application of internal law when it is pertinent to the meaning expressed in treaties.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

As a result of recent events involving irregular financing in politics, as well as the public scrutiny suffered by the IRS given the delay in the filing of claims relative to said acts, there is now particular emphasis placed on all taxpayer acts or conducts that constitute tax criminal offences. Hence, a stricter attitude has been perceived regarding said conducts, unlike in the past when such offences would have merely been sanctioned with the civil collection of taxes.

From another perspective, there has been a change of criteria regarding the additional tax that taxpayers residing in Chile must retain in the case of the purchase or acquisition of broadcasting rights, or the marketing of material to be exhibited in cinemas or on television. The tax authority has recently established that said cases fall under the royalties included in Provision No. 59 Section 1 of the Income Tax Law, with a withholding rate of 30 per cent, although Section 2 of the Provision specifically regulates this situation with a reduced rate of 20 per cent.

The IRS focuses much of its efforts on the supervision of tax losses that are used by taxpayers to request tax returns, as well as on processes of investment justification in which taxpayers – during a determined period of time – concentrate a certain amount of investments that are not in accordance with their declared income.

<sup>9</sup> Administrative declarations that took away value from the OECD's model and commentaries were based on the fact that Chile was not a member of the OECD – a situation that changed in 2010 with the incorporation of Chile into the OECD.

In the past few years, an aggressive auditing plan has been set forth to fight back-to-back financing (financing made by related companies through financial institutions). Given the above, the IRS, instead of verifying proper compliance with thin capitalisation rules in force specifically for these purposes, is now focusing on directly rejecting expenses associated with this type of financing structure, a stance that openly opposes that established by the Income Tax Law.

In 2016, the IRS issued an administrative pronouncement<sup>10</sup> directed exclusively towards Isapres (private pension institutions) in which it stated that judicial costs that had to be paid by them as a consequence of losing lawsuits filed by their clients due to annual increases to their health plans could not be considered as accepted expenses, and therefore had to be subject to the 35 per cent sole tax stated in Article 21<sup>11</sup> of the Income Tax Law.

Due to this IRS pronouncement, several assessments were issued to the Isapres, which, for years, had been deducting these expenses from their results without their ever being questioned by the tax authorities. As a consequence of the foregoing, this business sector is involved in a huge conflict with the IRS, which will be resolved by our courts sooner or later.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Chile is currently undergoing profound changes regarding its tax legislation. These changes were introduced by Tax Reform Act No. 20,780 and perfected by Act No. 20,899, through which important modifications were introduced into the Income Tax Law, the Sales and Services Tax Act, and the Tax Code. In this sense, among many other modifications:

- a* alternative taxing systems were established for companies;
- b* the first category income tax rate (companies) was increased;
- c* limits were established for the return of taxes resulting from loss absorbcency;
- d* carry back was eliminated;
- e* a general anti-evasion rule was incorporated;
- f* the IRS' auditing faculties were extended;
- g* controlled foreign corporation rules were incorporated; and
- h* thin capitalisation rules were modified.

Even though Act No. 20,899 simplified several aspects of the tax reform implemented by Act No. 20,780, said amendments will only enter into force in 2017; therefore, it is impossible to precisely predict the success of such tax reform and the goals that were set for it. Therefore, and as consequence of the scope and complexity of the adjustments introduced by the tax reform, it will certainly be difficult to identify if having a dual taxation system will work or not. Only once the tax reform is implemented as a whole, and has worked as such for a couple of years, will we be able to identify what the real effects of the tax reform are, and if they meet the goals that were set forth when it was implemented.

10 Ruling No. 137, 22 August 2016.

11 As consequence of the tax reform, this rate increased to 40 per cent.

I INTRODUCTION

Currently, there is no unified revenue code in China. The Chinese tax law system consists of four laws, including the Enterprise Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China; about 30 administrative regulations, including the Interim Regulation of the People's Republic of China on Value Added Tax; and more than 50 departmental rules, including Detailed Rules for the Implementation of the Interim Regulation of the People's Republic of China on Value Added Tax and other tax regulatory documents. Taxes are divided into national taxes and local taxes, which are collected and managed by bureaux of state taxation and bureaux of local taxation respectively. National taxes and local taxes make up national and local financial income. The State Administration of Taxation is the agency directly under the State Council, which is in charge of tax collection and management.

Usually, tax disputes are divided into tax administrative disputes and tax criminal disputes. The resolution of tax administrative disputes consists of four stages:

- a* consultation and communication between taxpayers and taxation authorities before the notification of tax administrative decisions and penalties is made;
- b* tax administrative penalties hearing procedure;
- c* tax administrative reconsideration; and
- d* tax administrative litigation.

Tax disputes are mostly solved during the first stage, and hardly ever through litigation. The amount of time and money required to resolve a tax dispute depends on which phase it is in. It could take a few months to several years. Parties involved pay no fees during these stages except for tax administrative litigation. However, taxpayers have to pay late fees if tax is not paid as required before the deadline. In criminal tax disputes, the party may break the criminal law and would therefore be sentenced in a criminal prosecution.

Overall, the concerned party has to pay few fees to the taxation authorities or the courts to resolve a tax dispute. However, they may have to spend several months to several years on it, depending on the complexity of the case and the effect of communication. To solve tax disputes smoothly, the taxpayers should communicate positively with the taxation authorities to reach a resolution acceptable to both parties.

i Consultation and communication between taxpayers and taxation authorities

Taxpayers have the right to state their views and make their claims during tax inspections. Taxation authorities deliver a notice of related tax matters to taxpayers, in which the proposed tax administrative decisions and penalties and the rights of taxpayers are clarified, before a formal notification of tax administrative decisions and penalties is made. Although arguments and defences are not required in writing by law, a written response would be the better choice for defending a taxpayer's rights more effectively.

ii Tax administrative penalties hearing procedure

Before making a decision on a tax administrative penalty where a taxpayer involved is to be fined more than 2,000 renminbi, or a legal person or other organisation involved is to be fined more than 10,000 renminbi, the taxation authorities will:

- a* notify all parties concerned of the illicit act;
- b* provide evidence;
- c* establish the legal basis for administrative punishment; and
- d* establish the administrative punishment to be given to the party concerned, and that he or she has the right to request a hearing.

The party should request a hearing within three days after being notified by the taxation authorities. The failure of an applicant to raise such a hearing request before the prescribed time limit is deemed as waiver of the hearing right.

iii Tax administrative reconsideration

With the exception of certain cases, tax administrative reconsideration is not a necessary legal procedure prior to tax administrative litigation. Generally, the applicant should apply for the tax administrative reconsideration within 60 days from the date when they become aware of such administrative acts. When refusing to accept a specific administrative act taken by bureaux of state taxation, the applicant should apply to the competent bureau of state taxation at a higher level for administrative reconsideration. When refusing to accept a specific administrative act taken by bureaux of local taxation, the applicant may choose to apply to the people's government at the same level or to the competent bureau of local taxation at a higher level for administrative reconsideration. The applicant may apply for administrative reconsideration in written or oral form, but applying in writing is the better choice to make clear any claims and reasons.

Specifically, administrative reconsideration organs will accept the administrative reconsideration applications filed by applicants against the following specific administrative acts made by taxation authorities:

- a* acts of tax collection, including the determination of taxpayer, taxation object, taxation scope, tax deduction, tax exemption, tax refund, tax credit, applicable tax rates, tax calculation basis, time limit for tax payment, tax payment place, tax collection methods and other specific administrative acts. In addition, the collection of tax, additional collection of late fees, and the tax withholding, collection and payment acts by the tax withholding agents and entities and individuals authorised by taxation authorities, etc.;
- b* administrative licensing and administrative examination and approval acts;
- c* invoice management acts, including issuing and taking over invoices, issuing invoices on a commissioned basis, etc.;
- d* tax preservation acts and compulsory enforcement acts;
- e* acts of administrative penalties: fines; confiscation of property or illegal gains; or suspension of the right to export tax refunds;
- f* acts of failing to perform the following duties in accordance with law:
  - issuing tax registration certificates;
  - issuing or providing tax-paid certificates or tax administration certificates for business activities carried out in other places;
  - administrative compensation;
  - administrative awards; or
  - other acts of failing to perform duties in accordance with the law;
- g* acts of determination of eligibility;
- h* acts of failing to confirm guarantees for tax payments in accordance with the law;
- i* specific administrative acts in government information disclosure work;
- j* acts of tax credit rating;
- k* acts of informing entry-exit organs to prevent some people from leaving China; or
- l* other specific administrative acts.

iv Tax administrative litigation

An administrative counterpart can bring suits before a people's court within six months from the day when he or she knows that an administrative act has been undertaken or within 15 days from the day of the receipt of the reconsideration decision against any of the following matters (except as otherwise provided for by law):

- a* refusing to accept a tax administrative sanction;
- b* refusing to accept a tax compulsory administrative measure or compulsory administrative enforcement;
- c* infringement upon one's managerial decision-making powers that is considered to have been perpetrated by an administrative organ;
- d* refusal by or failure of a tax authority to respond within the statutory time limit to an application for administrative permits or refusing to accept other decisions relating to administrative permits as rendered by a tax authority;
- e* cases where an administrative organ is considered to have illegally demanded the performance of duties; and

- f* other administrative suits that may be brought in accordance with the provisions of relevant laws and regulations, such as an administrative compensation cases and company registration cases.

Where an applicant has an objection to any of the acts of tax collection (including the determination of the taxpayer, taxation object, taxation scope, tax deduction, tax exemption, tax refund, tax credit, applicable tax rates, tax calculation basis, taxation links, time limit for tax payment, tax payment place, tax collection methods and other specific administrative acts, collection of tax, additional collection of late fees, and the tax withholding, collection and payment acts by tax withholding agents and entities and individuals authorised by tax organs), he or she shall first file an administrative reconsideration application with the administrative reconsideration organ. If the applicant refuses to accept the administrative reconsideration decision, he or she may lodge an administrative lawsuit with the people's court.

A tax administrative case will be under the jurisdiction of the people's court in the locality of the tax authority that initially undertook the administrative act. A reconsidered case may also be placed under the jurisdiction of the people's court in the locality of the tax authority conducting the reconsideration. Regarding the jurisdiction of a court, there are special regulations on lawsuits against compulsory administrative measures restricting the freedom of a person or regarding real estate. The Chinese court system is divided into four levels: basic people's courts, intermediate people's courts, higher people's courts and the Supreme People's Court. Additionally, there are military courts, railway courts, maritime courts and other special people's courts. The basic people's courts have jurisdiction as courts of first instance over tax administrative cases. The intermediate people's courts and higher people's courts have jurisdiction as courts of first instance over grave and complicated administrative cases in areas under their jurisdiction. The Supreme People's Court has jurisdiction as a court of first instance over grave and complicated administrative cases involving the whole country. In practice, a case against China's state administration of taxation is under the jurisdiction of the intermediate people's court. The higher people's court and the Supreme People's Court seldom accept tax administrative cases as courts of first instance, and they focus on the trial of second instance cases and supervising the work of subordinate courts.

v Tax criminal litigation

If the taxation authority finds that a crime has been constituted, it shall transfer the case to the judicial authorities to be investigated for criminal responsibility in accordance with the law.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Tax dispute resolution procedures before litigation

In the tax inspection procedure, the negotiation between taxpayers and the taxation authorities is not a formal but a legal tax disputes resolution procedure. The taxation authorities may or may not review taxpayers' statements and arguments, and the negotiation may or may not have an effect on the administrative decision or the administrative penalty.

The tax administrative penalty hearing and tax administrative reconsideration are two formal tax dispute resolution procedures. During the procedure of the tax administrative penalty hearing, a presider is appointed by the taxation authorities, who shall not be one of the investigators in the case. When the taxpayer considers that the presider has a direct interest in the case, he or she is empowered to request disqualification. In tax administrative reconsiderations, an administrative reconsideration organ hears an tax administrative case; usually there will be two members of staff present. In principle, an administrative reconsideration takes the form of a written examination; however, when the applicant requests, or the departments in charge of the legal work under an administrative reconsideration organ deem it necessary, an investigation may be conducted among the organisations and persons concerned, and the opinions of the applicant, the defending party to the application and the third party are taken into account. A tax administrative penalty hearing and tax administrative reconsideration usually will not last long.

ii Tax administrative litigation

First instance over tax administrative cases

The people's courts, independent from taxation authorities, have jurisdiction as courts over tax administrative cases. Generally, there are administrative tribunals in people's courts that are in charge of the trial of administrative cases. A people's court shall render a judgment of first instance within six months from the day of placing the case on file. Any extension of the time limit necessitated by special circumstances shall be approved by a high people's court. An extension of the time limit for handling a case of first instance by a high people's court shall be approved by the Supreme People's Court.

Second instance over tax administrative cases

If a party refuses to accept a judgment of first instance by a people's court, he or she has the right to file an appeal with the people's court at the next higher level within 15 days of the serving of the written judgment. If a party refuses to accept an order of first instance by a people's court, he or she has the right to file an appeal with the people's court at the next higher level within 10 days of the serving of the written order. All judgments and orders of first instance by a people's court that have not been appealed within the prescribed time limit are legally effective. In handling a case of appeal, the people's court makes a final judgment within three months from the day of receiving the appeal. Any extension of the time limit necessitated by special circumstances shall be approved by a high people's court. Any extension of the time limit for handling a case of appeal by a high people's court is approved by the Supreme People's Court.

Amendment of the administrative litigation law

On 1 November 2014, the administrative litigation law was extensively amended, and the amendments mainly affect tax administrative litigation in the following four aspects.

- a* Strengthening the reconsideration agency's defendant liabilities. Under the old regulation, when the reconsideration agency decides to sustain the original administrative action, it shall not be the defendant. However, under the new rule, if the reconsideration agency's decision sustains the original administrative action, the taxpayer is entitled to sue the administrative agency and the reconsideration agency at the same time, and the administrative agency and the reconsideration agency shall be co-defendants.
- b* Doubling the time limit to sue. According to the new law rules, a taxpayer's time limit to sue is doubled from three to six months, which reduces the chances of exceeding the time limit.

- c* Establishing the rationality of judicial review. Under the old rules, the court could only review the legality of specific administrative acts. However, the new rules state that the court shall review both the legality and rationality of the administrative action being sued, and if the defendant cannot prove the rationality or the plaintiff cannot prove that the sued administrative action obviously lacks rationality, the court shall enter a judgment to entirely or partially revoke the administrative action being sued.
- d* Mediation is allowed in limited circumstances. The amended law allows the court to conduct mediation between the plaintiff and the defendant if the case involves administrative compensation or indemnity, or involves an administrative agency's exercise of discretionary power prescribed by any law or regulation.

iii Tax criminal proceedings

Tax criminal proceedings are similar to general criminal proceedings, and include opening a case, a criminal investigation, initiation of public prosecution, and procedures at first instance and at second instance. Depending on the case's complexity, the criminal proceedings from opening a case to pronouncing judgment may take several months or several years.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Administrative penalties by taxation authorities include fines, confiscating illegal gains, suspending tax refunds for exports and revoking a tax registration certificate. Among these, fines are the most common penalty. According to the provisions of tax law, the fine can be five times as high as the tax involved. In practice, the fine ordinarily varies from the same amount as the tax involved to twice as much.

If the involved party breaks the criminal law, he or she should be tried for criminal responsibility by the court in accordance with the law. According to the criminal law of China, there are more than 20 tax-related crimes, including tax evasion, refusing to pay taxes, export tax refund fraud, falsely making specialised VAT receipts, and practising favouritism to over-collect or under-collect tax. If someone were to be convicted of such a crime, the most severe penalty would be life imprisonment.

i Recovering overpaid tax

When the taxation authorities discover that a taxpayer has made a tax payment in excess of the amount of tax payable, they immediately refund the excess payment. When a taxpayer discovers the same, he or she may, within three years from the date the payment is made, claim from the taxation authorities a refund of the excess payment, plus the interest calculated according to the bank interest rates at the time. The taxation authorities shall immediately pay back the money upon examination and verification of the case. Where such a refund involves the State Treasury, it shall be dealt with in accordance with the provisions on the administration of the State Treasury in the relevant laws and administrative regulations. The taxpayer can ask to be allowed to deduct the excess payment from a later tax payment instead.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

China does not have a common law system. Specific administrative actions are only based on tax laws and regulations. As such, it is not feasible to challenge an administrative decision on the grounds of it being dissimilar to an administrative decision in a similar case. In actual fact, it is normal for administrative decisions to differ in similar cases because of the discrepancy in law enforcement.

iii Claimants

Only an administrative counterpart is allowed to initiate the resolution procedure of tax disputes: that is, taxpayers or tax-withholding agents and other related parties. In practice, business counterparts usually reach a tax-sharing agreement in contracts. If the tax burden changes due to a tax dispute, entities or individuals that are obligated to pay tax in accordance with the law or the administrative regulations must bear the tax burden. A dispute over a change of trading costs should be solved through consultation and dialogue between the parties concerned. Should consultation fail, the party can file a civil lawsuit.

iv Tax administrative compensation

Where the taxation authorities or tax officials, in exercising their functions and powers, have infringed upon the legitimate rights and interests of taxpayers and other related parties, thereby causing damage to them, the taxation authorities should pay state compensation to the victims. A claimant who demands compensation should first apply to the organ liable for the compensation, or make demands for it simultaneously when applying for administrative reconsideration of the case or when bringing an administrative action. The taxation authority liable for compensation should, within two months from the date of receiving the application, make a decision on whether to provide compensation. If the claimant raises an opposition against the form, item or amount of compensation, or the organ liable for compensation makes a decision to reject the compensation claim, the claimant can bring a suit in a people's court within three months of the decision.

Specifically, the victim has the right to compensation if a taxation authority or its taxation officials, in exercising their administrative functions and powers, commit any of the following acts infringing upon the property and personal rights of a citizen:

- a* illegally inflicting administrative penalties, such as the imposition of fines, ordering the suspension of production and business, or the confiscation of property;
- b* illegally implementing compulsory administrative measures such as sealing up, distraining or freezing property;
- c* illegally collecting tax;
- d* other illegal acts causing damage to property;
- e* detaining a citizen in violation of the law or unlawfully taking compulsory administrative measures in restraint of his or her personal freedom, or unlawfully taking a citizen into custody or depriving him or her of his or her personal rights by other unlawful means;
- f* using, instigating or allowing another to use means such as violence or abuse, thereby causing bodily injury or death to a citizen;
- g* unlawfully using weapons or police restraint implements, thereby causing bodily injury to or death of a citizen; or
- h* other unlawful acts causing bodily injury or death to a citizen.

VI COSTS

The party initiates the consultation and communication between taxpayers and the taxation authorities, the administrative penalties hearing procedure and the tax administrative reconsideration. They do not have to pay fees.

A people's court charges litigation fees for handling tax administrative cases. The litigation fee is borne by the losing party, or by both parties if they are both held responsible. Generally the litigation fee is 50 yuan. No litigation fee is involved in criminal tax procedures and administrative tax compensation cases.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Under Chinese tax law, there is currently no tax advance ruling system or tax arbitration system. Negotiation in advance of transactions between taxpayers and taxation authorities is informal and not legally binding on taxation authorities.

Mediation and reconciliation are only applied to a tax administrative reconsideration, a tax administrative compensation litigation and the tax administrative agency's exercise of its discretionary power. In tax dispute resolution procedures before litigation, tax authorities may or may not accept taxpayers' arguments against their administrative decisions or the administrative penalty. In tax administrative litigation procedures, taxation authorities may also accept taxpayers' arguments and change their former specific administrative acts. Even though taxpayers and taxation authorities reach agreement on related tax matters, these agreements require the taxation authorities to conduct specific administrative acts to confirm their legal effect. Thus, they are qualified to bind taxpayers and taxation authorities.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

The anti-tax avoidance system in China obtains its source of law in the Enterprise Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China, and there is no anti-tax avoidance rule in the Individual Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China. In the Enterprise Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China and its implementation regulations, there are specific provisions for taxation authorities to affirm enterprises' tax avoidance, such as transfer pricing, thin capitalisation and controlled foreign enterprises, and to adjust the tax amount. In addition, there is one general anti-tax avoidance rule in the Enterprise Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China, which is a rule of principle. In 2015, with the State Administration of Taxation issued Measures for the Administration of General Anti-Tax Avoidance (for Trial Implementation), China's anti-tax avoidance system became more comprehensive.

The anti-tax avoidance system in China consists of three parts: the special tax adjustment system, the anti-abuse of taxation agreements system and the general anti-tax avoidance system.

The special tax adjustment system's sources of law include the Enterprise Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China, the Regulation on the Implementation of the Enterprise Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China and Measures for the Implementation of Special Tax Adjustments (Trial). Its investigation and adjustment objects are tax avoidance schemes between affiliated enterprises such as transfer pricing, thin capitalisation, cost amortisation and controlled foreign enterprises. According to relevant regulations, enterprises that have associated transactions shall prepare, preserve and submit the materials for the time periods of the associated transactions.

In the investigation procedure, enterprises that are seen as suspects of tax avoidance through associated transactions have to take half of the responsibility of the burden of proof. Based on the materials submitted by enterprises, the taxation authorities decide whether to establish a case. After a case is established, the taxation authorities need to serve the companies with a notice on tax-related matters. Through the investigation procedure, the taxation authorities are empowered to require enterprises to provide relevant documents, to collect evidence from enterprises and to carry out an onsite investigation. After the investigation, the taxation authorities examine all the materials and choose the specified method to analyse and evaluate whether associated transactions comply with the arm's-length principle. Where the investigation results show that transactions between associated enterprises comply with the arm's-length principle, the taxation authorities make their conclusion and serve the 'notification of special tax investigation conclusion' to the concerned enterprises. When the investigation results suggest that transactions between associated enterprises do not comply with the arm's-length principle, resulting in the reduction of their incomes or taxable income, the taxation authorities draft a preliminary special tax adjustment plan, and negotiations between enterprises and taxation authorities shall be conducted according to the preliminary adjustment plan.

Where an enterprise disagrees with the preliminary adjustment plan, the enterprise shall provide further related information within the time period prescribed by the relevant taxation authority, and the taxation authority shall review the further information, make a review decision in a timely manner and serve the 'notice on preliminary adjustment plan of special tax investigation' to the enterprises concerned. Where an enterprise disagrees with the preliminary adjustment opinions stated in the notice, it files such disagreement in writing with the relevant taxation authority within seven days of receipt of the notice, while the taxation authority reviews and holds negotiations again upon the receipt thereof. The taxation authorities confirm the final adjustment plan and serve the 'notice on special taxation investigation adjustment' on the concerned enterprise. After receiving the 'notice on special taxation investigation adjustment', an enterprise pays the taxes and interest due within specified time limits. If an enterprise still disagrees with the notice, it is allowed to apply for administrative reconsideration and, after the administrative reconsideration procedure, it is allowed to litigate a lawsuit.

The general anti-tax avoidance system's sources of law include the Enterprise Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China, the Regulations on the Implementation of the Enterprise Income Tax Law of the People's Republic of China and Measures for the Administration of General Anti-Tax Avoidance (for Trial Implementation). Its investigation and adjustment objects are tax avoidance schemes except for transfer pricing, thin capitalisation, cost amortisation and controlled foreign enterprises. The tax avoidance scheme has the following characteristics: the sole or main purpose is to obtain a tax benefit; and the tax benefit is obtained by using an arrangement whose form is permitted in accordance with the tax rules, but is not consistent with its economic substance.

According to the principle of substance over form, tax authorities make special tax adjustments by reference to other similar arrangements with reasonable commercial purpose and economic substance. Adjustment methods include:

- a* redefining the nature of all or part of the transactions arranged;
- b* denying the existence of transaction parties in tax collection, or treating such transaction parties and other transaction parties as the same entities;
- c* redefining the nature of or redistributing among all transaction parties the relevant income, deductions, tax preferences, and overseas tax credits, among others; and
- d* other reasonable methods.

The general anti-tax avoidance system's investigation procedure, disagreement procedure and adjustment procedure are similar to those of the special tax adjustment system.

Nowadays, with the promotion of international cooperation on anti-tax avoidance and domestic taxation's deep pressure resulting from the slowdown of the worldwide economic conditions, the government is stepping up efforts to investigate and adjust tax avoidance. Because of the not-yet-perfect anti-tax avoidance system, the number of tax disputes on anti-tax avoidance is increasing fast, and enterprises that conduct tax avoidance schemes are facing more and more tax risks. Thus, in China, tax lawyers are playing a much more important role in enterprises' tax planning.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

By the end of March 2014, the government had officially signed 101 DTTs and arrangements. DTTs have a positive role on the avoidance of double taxation. Taking dividends as an example, a non-resident enterprise pays enterprise income tax at a 10 per cent rate on its dividends earned from inside China. DTTs between China and Singapore, Mauritius, etc., reduce the applicable tax rate on non-resident enterprises' dividends from 10 to 5 or 7 per cent. Therefore, according to certain conditions, non-resident enterprises that earn income from inside China are allowed to apply for relevant treatments under certain DTTs to lower the taxation burden on international income.

On 25 August 2015, the Association for Relations Across the Taiwan Straits and Straits Exchange Foundation officially signed the Agreement Across the Straits for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and Strengthening Taxation Collaboration. This agreement sets up the rules including residents, permanent establishments, income from immovable property, business profits, dividends, interest, royalties, capital gains and some other taxation collaboration articles. After the legal transformation procedure is complete, this agreement will come into force in the form of a specific regulation in mainland China, as it is in Taiwan.

The government is currently improving the anti-abuse of taxation agreements system, and the Chinese taxation authorities are making more effort to investigate and adjust non-resident enterprises' abuse of DTTs. This year saw a case about a non-resident enterprise's abuse of the beneficial owner in a taxation agreement.<sup>2</sup> A summary of the case is as follows.

X company is set up in America, and X company invested and set up Y company in Mauritius. Y company invested and set up Z company in Qingdao, China. Z company's main businesses are international freight and containers. In March 2014, the shareholders' meeting of Z company made a determination to distribute dividends of 600 million yuan to its single shareholder, Y company. According to the DTT between China and Mauritius and domestic tax law in China, Y company is liable to pay enterprise income tax on its dividends from Z company, and has the right to choose to apply a 5 per cent tax rate regulated in the DTT between China and Mauritius, and Z company is obligated to withhold and remit Y company's tax after distribution. While Z company collected and remitted Y company's tax to the Qingdao tax authority, with Y company's consignment, Z company applied to the Qingdao tax authority for the enjoyment of the DTT between China and Mauritius, which means the application of a 5 per cent tax rate, and remitted Y company's tax of 30 million yuan. The Qingdao tax authority established the case and investigated Y company, concluded that Y company was not the beneficial owner and refused Y company's application. Finally, Z company collected and remitted Y company's tax of 60 million yuan at a 10 per cent tax rate in accordance with domestic tax law in China.

It can be seen through this case that the Chinese taxation authorities attach more importance to non-resident enterprises' abuse of taxation agreements. Enterprises should pay attention to this kind of tax risk and make sure that they can conform to the compliance requirements when they apply to enjoy the treatments as prescribed in the tax agreements.

The DTTs signed by the government with foreign countries usually enter into force after both sides' signature. They are seen as part of the domestic tax laws, and they prevail over the domestic tax laws. DTTs often regulate that both of the contracting states are empowered to explain the provisions of the DTTs, and the government has issued departmental regulatory documents to specifically explain and apply the DTTs. For example, there are documents, including the Implementation Measures for the Mutual Agreement Procedure of Tax Treaties, the Administrative Measures for Non-residents to Enjoy the Treatments of Tax Treaties (Trial), the Announcement of the State Administration of Taxation on Relevant Issues Concerning the Terms of Property Income in Tax Treaties and the Notice of the State Administration of Taxation about the Interpretation of the Relevant Articles of the Agreement between China and Singapore for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Implementation thereof. Non-resident enterprises should comply with rules regulated by the above documents when they apply to the Chinese taxation authorities to enjoy the treatments as prescribed in tax agreements, and it is suggested that they acquire the help of Chinese tax lawyers.

i Overall B2V reform

On 24 March 2016, the Ministry of Finance and the State Administration of Taxation jointly released Caishui [2016] No. 36 on the Comprehensive Roll-out of the Replacing Business Tax with Value-Added Tax (B2V) Transformation Pilot Programme. Meanwhile, four documents of expansion measures for the B2V Reform were officially released:

- a* Measures for Implementing the B2V Pilot Programme;
- b* Provisions on Relevant Matters concerning the B2V Pilot Programme;
- c* Provisions on the Transitional Policies for the Pilot Program of B2V; and
- d* Provisions on the Application of Zero VAT Rate and VAT Exemption Policy to Cross-Border Taxable Activities.

Accordingly, from May 2016, all industries under the business tax regime have been transferred to the VAT regime.

ii B2V reform challenges for the real estate and construction sectors

The key points regarding B2V in these industries include:

- a* qualified old construction projects can elect the simplified VAT method;
- b* the selling or renting of immovable property and the construction industry are subject to the general VAT method at a rate of 11 per cent;
- c* a real estate development general VAT taxpayer selling an old self-developed real estate project can elect the simplified VAT method;
- d* the qualified land acquisition price can be deducted from the sales amount;
- e* taxpayers can claim input VAT credit on VAT incurred on the purchase of immovable property with valid invoices; and
- f* pilot taxpayers providing overseas construction services are eligible for a VAT exemption.

Taxpayers in the real estate and construction industry should pay attention to the impact of the B2V reform and focus on the following two areas:

- a* Preventing tax risk. Pilot taxpayers should make sure that they will be in compliance with the tax rules after the B2V reform. Compared with the relatively simple business tax business tax, the administration of VAT is much stricter. In some aspects, such as day-to-day matters, tax return filings and special VAT invoices, the administration requirement of the tax authorities are more complicated.
- b* Monitoring the reduction of the tax burden. VAT will have an impact on the income statement through items such as revenue, cost, expenses, taxes, etc. The accounting method of tax-price separation will also affect the corporate income tax, land appreciation tax, etc. Taxpayers should make full use of the policy, as far as reasonably possible, to monitor the reduction in the tax burden.

iii B2V reform brings the financial service sector into the VAT chain

The key points regarding B2V in the financial service sector include:

- a* the tax rate is 6 per cent;
- b* input VAT on lending services received by the borrower (interest cost) cannot be creditable;
- c* the taxable sales amount of each trading transaction of financial products will be the balance of the sales price less the purchase cost;
- d* the previous business tax preferential policies for the financial service sector will be largely retained; and
- e* certain specific cross-border financial services provided by pilot taxpayers will be entitled to the export VAT exemption treatment.

Taxpayers in the financial service sector should pay attention to the impact of the B2V reform and focus on the following two areas:

- a* Preventing tax risk. It is critical for taxpayers to upgrade or revamp their IT systems within a short time frame to make sure that the accounting results and statements are correct. From the perspective of issuing VAT invoices, financial service taxpayers with massive business volumes should make sure that VAT invoices can be timely issued according to the VAT rules.

- b* Monitoring the reduction of the tax burden. The applicability of preferential tax policies, the timing of the purchasing of assets and the business cycle of the enterprise will have an impact on the VAT burden. Pilot taxpayers should make full use of the policy, as far as reasonably possible, to monitor the reduction of the tax burden and fully consider the impact to all taxes and surcharges in estimating the changes in the overall tax burden to evaluate the overall impact of the B2V reform on the business operation.

iv B2V reform levies VAT on consumer services

The key points of B2V in the consumer services sector include:

- a* the consumer services industry is subject to the general VAT method at a rate of 6 per cent;
- b* input VAT for catering services, resident daily services and entertainment services is not creditable;
- c* preferential treatments for the consumer services industry under the business tax regime are mostly retained;
- d* VAT pilot taxpayers providing tourism services are taxed on a net basis; and
- e* VAT pilot taxpayers providing cultural and sports services, education and medical services, and tourism services outside China are eligible for the VAT exemption treatments for exported services.

Taxpayers in the consumer services sector should pay attention to the impact of the B2V reform and focus on the following two areas:

- a* Preventing tax risk. As compared with the relatively simple business tax administration, the administration of VAT is much stricter. Regarding some aspects, such as day-to-day matters, tax return filings and special VAT invoices, the administration requirements of the tax authorities are more complicated. Pilot taxpayers should pay more attention to risks relating to revenue recognition, input VAT credit and invoice management, and establish a sound tax internal control system to make sure the tax rules are fully complied with.
- b* Monitoring the reduction of the tax burden. For taxpayers in consumer services, the applicability of tax-preferential treatment, the timing of the purchase of assets and the business cycle of the enterprise can easily influence the VAT burden. Taxpayers should make full use of the policy, as far as reasonably possible, to monitor the reduction in the tax burden. They should also fully consider the impact to all taxes and surcharges such as corporate income tax, urban construction and maintenance tax and the education surcharge, in estimating the changes in the total tax burden to understand the overall impact of the B2V reform on operational outcomes.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

In China, there are many methods of tax dispute resolution, including negotiations between enterprises and taxation authorities, administrative tax penalty hearings, administrative tax reconsiderations, administrative tax litigation and criminal tax procedures. However, in practice, most tax disputes are solved through negotiations between enterprises and the taxation authorities. On one hand, this kind of resolution avoids complex legal procedures; on the other, it contributes to maintaining a good relationship between taxpayers and the taxation authorities. In the future, with the reinforcement of Chinese taxpayers' legal awareness and the promotion of governing taxation according to law, there will be more and more administrative tax reconsideration cases and administrative tax litigation cases.

Regarding the avoidance of double taxation and anti-tax avoidance, the Chinese taxation authorities are making efforts to enhance the capacity of tax law enforcement and to try to keep the tax rules consistent with international practices. Enterprises' tax avoidance schemes are facing more and more tax law risks in China, and there will be more and more tax disputes and cases in this area.

I INTRODUCTION

A taxpayer who wishes to challenge a decision by the Danish tax authorities must first exhaust all possibilities of administrative appeal within the administrative tax appeal system before being allowed to bring the case before the Danish courts.

The Danish administrative tax appeal system consists of five separate appellate authorities (Administrative Appeal Authority) (see Section III, infra) established for the purpose of providing taxpayers with an economic, fast and thorough review of a taxpayer's appeal by persons who are proficient in tax-related questions, as opposed to the civil courts where the presiding judges are not necessarily experts on the tax matter at hand. Furthermore, the fees for bringing a case before the Administrative Appeal Authority are usually much lower than the fees associated with bringing a case before the Danish courts.

Statistics published by the Danish Tax Appeal Agency<sup>2</sup> show that in 2015, a total of 15,155 new cases were submitted to the Administrative Appeal Authority, and that of the appellate cases decided by the Administrative Appeal Authority in 2015, the taxpayer was successful or partially successful in 28 per cent of such cases.<sup>3</sup> The process time of an appeal before the Administrative Appeal Authority varies depending on which section of the Administrative Appeal Authority is handling the case and the circumstances of the case, but the process time is generally anywhere between six and 23 months.

2 2015 Annual Report – Tax Appeal Agency.

3 An average of the taxpayers' success rate in the National Tax Tribunal, the National Tax Board, the Tax Appeal Agency, the Valuation Board of Appeal and the Motor Vehicle Board of Appeal.

When the Administrative Appeal Authority has issued its decision, the unsuccessful party may bring the decision of the Administrative Appeal Authority before the Danish courts. There is no specialised tax court in Denmark, and an appeal of the Administrative Appeal Authority's decision will therefore be tried as any other civil case, with little derogation from the civil law procedural rules.

While the taxpayer and the Danish tax authorities are both permitted to bring the decisions of the Administrative Appeal Authority before the Danish courts, only 13 of the 319 decisions appealed in 2015 were brought by the Danish tax authorities.<sup>4</sup> While Danish taxpayers quite often use their constitutional right to challenge a decision by the Administrative Appeal Authority, the Danish tax authorities have an established practice of only appealing decisions by the Administrative Appeal Authority if a case is considered to be of significant importance or if special circumstances necessitate judicial review.

Statistics show that only an average of 16.1 per cent<sup>5</sup> of tax cases brought before the district courts on appeal are ruled in favour of the taxpayer. On further appeal to the Danish high courts, the taxpayers' success rate is a little higher. There has been significant speculation as to why the success rate of taxpayers is so low compared to that of the Danish tax authorities. Some argue that the tax officials working at the Administrative Appeal Authority are simply very good at their jobs and therefore any errors in decisions or assessments are corrected in the Administrative Appeal Authority's decisions. Others, however, argue that the courts have a natural bias towards the Danish tax authorities, and therefore tend to rule in favour of the Danish tax authorities if the substance or technicalities of the case are too complex, consequently making it difficult for non-tax specialists to completely understand.

There are currently no statistics on how long a case is generally pending in the Danish courts. It highly depends on the case, the court and the parties.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Tax disputes usually arise as a consequence of a revised assessment of a taxpayer's income made by the tax authorities or if the tax authorities disagree with a tax return filed by the taxpayer. Tax disputes may, however, also arise if the taxpayer wishes to contest a binding ruling issued by the National Tax Board (see Section VII, infra). This section describes:

- a* the process of the tax authorities' and taxpayers' access to amend a former assessment of taxable income;
- b* the specifics of the appeal within the administrative appeal system;
- c* the process of the appeal in the courts; and
- d* the possibility of postponement of contested payable taxes.

i Adjustment of assessment

An adjustment of a prior assessment of the taxable income of a taxpayer may at times be necessary. For purposes of legal certainty, the tax authorities must notify the taxpayer of such adjustment at the latest on 1 May in the fourth income year following the year of said income (e.g., no later than 1 May 2016 for adjustments to the 2012 income year). The notification must be followed by an actual adjustment at the latest on 1 August in the fourth income year following the year of said income (e.g., no later than 1 August 2016 for adjustments to the 2012 income year). If the taxpayer wishes to adjust a prior assessment, he or she must provide factual or legal grounds for the adjustment at the latest on 1 May in the fourth income year following the year of said income (e.g., no later than 1 May 2016 for adjustments to the 2012 income year).

In assessments regarding controlled transactions, the notification period is extended to 1 May in the sixth income year following the year of said income (e.g., no later than 1 May 2016 for adjustments to the 2010 income year), and the adjustment period is equally extended to 1 August in the sixth year following the year of said income (e.g., no later than 1 August 2016 for adjustments to the 2010 income year). This extension is granted to the tax authorities as well as taxpayers, and is given due to the complexity of tax assessments in controlled transactions.

In certain situations, particularly in situations in which the taxpayer has acted grossly negligently or there has been a change in the legal basis of the assessment, the above-mentioned time limits are suspended and the adjustment of the assessment will only be subject to a 10-year statute of limitations.

In situations where the tax authorities want to adjust a taxpayer's tax assessment for a previous year, they must notify the taxpayer of such adjustment in a letter outlining the basis for the intended adjustment including information concerning new facts or circumstances substantiating the adjustment (a preliminary decision). The taxpayer is then permitted a certain amount of time to submit comments to the Danish tax authorities before they formalise their final decision on the case.

If the taxpayer is the one wishing to adjust a tax assessment for a previous year, he or she must notify the tax authorities of the request for adjustment within the time limit set out above and provide the basis for the adjustment. After having reviewed the adjustment request, the tax authorities will forward their proposed decision to the taxpayer. The taxpayer is allowed a period to comment, and the tax authorities will then determine the case.

ii Administrative appeal

Before a tax case can be brought before the Danish courts, all administrative appeal options must have been exhausted. However, if the Administrative Appeal Authority fails to issue a decision within six months from the date of the appeal, the taxpayer may bring the case before the Danish courts, provided the Administrative Appeal Authority has not issued a preliminary decision on the case.

A decision by the Danish tax authorities must be appealed to the Administrative Appeal Authority no later than three months from the date on which the taxpayer received the decision. The fee for bringing a case before the Administrative Appeal Authority is 400 Danish kroner. An appeal to the Administrative Appeal Authority is formally submitted to the Danish Tax Appeals Agency, which acts as the secretariat and provides the basis for the decisions of the Administrative Appeal Authority (see Section III, infra).

The administrative appeals process is very informal, and both parties will be allowed to provide additional comments and documents during the process. It is possible to have a meeting with a member of the Danish Tax Appeals Agency, which in certain situations may be advantageous, especially if the facts are disputed or if the case in general has been complex.

Following the preparation of the case, the Tax Appeals Agency issues a preliminary opinion to the relevant section of the Administrative Appeal Authority deciding the case, after which the preliminary opinion is forwarded to the parties for comments. The parties may request a meeting with the case handler at the respective section of the Administrative Appeal Authority, at which the case is argued in a trial-like manner by the parties. Following the parties' submission of comments and the possible meeting, the final decision is issued by the deciding Administrative Appeal Authority. As mentioned above, appeals with the Administrative Appeal Authority can last anywhere between six and 23 months.

As an exception, decisions rendered by the Danish Registration Court regarding stamp duty are appealed, bypassing the Administrative Appeal Authority. The appeal is submitted to the Danish Registration Court and referred directly to the Western High Court, where the appeal is processed.

iii Judicial proceedings

The taxpayer has a constitutional right to bring a decision issued by the Administrative Appeal Authority before the Danish courts.

Judicial proceedings contesting a decision by the Administrative Appeal Authority must be brought before the courts within three months from the date of the decision. Failure to do so bars both parties from judicial review of the case. The action must be brought before the district court in the taxpayer's jurisdiction. Cases before the district courts are generally decided by a single judge; however, the parties may request the case to be decided by three judges or referred directly to the High Court (which will always include three judges) if the case is considered to be of significant importance.

When bringing a case before the district courts, the plaintiff must pay a fee that is calculated on the basis of the value of the case. For cases with a value not exceeding 50,000 Danish kroner the plaintiff must pay a flat fee of 500 Danish kroner, while the fee in cases with a value exceeding 50,000 Danish kroner is made up of a flat fee of 750 Danish kroner plus 1.2 per cent of the value exceeding 50,000 Danish kroner. The fee payable in tax cases, however, cannot exceed 2,000 Danish kroner. Upon scheduling the trial date, the plaintiff must pay a similar secondary fee.

Civil procedural rules apply with only few exceptions, one rule being that the taxpayer must limit his or her claim to issues that are part of the initial decision of the Administrative Appeal Authority. As such, the parties may not introduce new claims in the appeal before the courts.

After the defendant has been served with the writ of summons, he or she must submit a statement of defence, followed by a reply and a rebuttal if necessary. Once the initial exchange of documents is finalised, the court will hold a preliminary hearing, which is usually done over the phone, in which the scope of the dispute is outlined and the trial is scheduled.

After the preliminary hearing, additional procedural documents and pleadings may be exchanged between the parties until the date of trial. At trial, the parties may call upon witnesses and experts to support their claims.

Following the completion of the trial, the judge generally renders his or her verdict within four weeks. If the court is sufficiently confident in its decision, the court may offer the parties a declaration of the outcome of the case at the end of the trial. If the parties accept the declaration (which will have the same effect as an intra-judicial settlement), the unsuccessful party often limits its liability for procedural costs, and the parties forfeit their right to a verdict, and therefore also their right to appeal.

In Denmark, an unsuccessful party has the right to appeal the verdict to the high court unless the merit of the appeal does not exceed 20,000 Danish kroner. Upon receiving the verdict, the unsuccessful party may appeal the case to the Western High Court or the Eastern High Court, depending on the jurisdiction of the taxpayer, within four weeks of the date of the verdict. It is recommended that an appeal is submitted within two weeks, as the taxpayer must produce collateral for the procedural costs to appeal the case if the case is appealed more than two weeks after the verdict.

The fees payable by the plaintiff to appeal the case to the high court are the same as in the district courts, the only exception being that the flat fee for cases with a value of no more than 50,000 Danish kroner is 750 Danish kroner.

In cases of principal importance, and only by application to the Appeals Permission Board, a case may be appealed from the high court to the Supreme Court.

Parties may, independently or jointly, submit a petition for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU if there is any doubt or inconsistency in the interpretation of the legislation based on EU law. The court decides whether the petition is granted. If a case is tried before the Supreme Court, the Court must always allow for a preliminary ruling upon the request of either of the parties provided that there is reasonable doubt as to the interpretation of the relevant EU law. Preliminary rulings are often seen in cases regarding VAT, as the Danish VAT Act is based on the EU VAT Directive 2006/112.

iv Injunctive relief

All taxpayers may apply for a postponement of payable taxes if a decision is pending appeal. While a postponement is usually granted, the tax authorities may however reject an application for postponement of taxes if there is considerable risk of abuse for purposes of avoidance or, alternatively, the tax authorities may require collateral for payable taxes before granting the postponement. A decision of postponement of taxes is given for a period of four years, but may be extended if the appeal lasts longer. The postponement is suspended at the time of conclusion of the appeal and, if the decision rendered by the Administrative Appeal Authority is brought before the courts, the taxpayer must file a renewed application for postponement.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

The Administrative Appeal Authority consists of:

- a* the Tax Appeal Agency;
- b* the National Tax Tribunal;
- c* the national tax boards of appeal;
- d* the valuation boards of appeal; and
- e* the motor vehicle boards of appeal.

i The Tax Appeal Agency

Taxpayers who wish to contest the decision of the tax authorities on a given tax matter must submit their appeal to the Tax Appeal Agency, which is an independent authority that acts as the secretariat for the National Tax Tribunal and the rest of the regional appeals boards. The Tax Appeal Agency prepares decisions on appeals involving taxation, VAT, duties, customs duty and property assessment, and decides in appeals involving collection of public debts.

Once an appeal has been submitted to the Tax Appeal Agency, the Tax Appeal Agency gathers all relevant information, including additional information from both the parties. After having finalised the preparation of the case, the case is referred to either the National Tax Tribunal or one of the regional appeals boards for decision.

ii The National Tax Tribunal

The National Tax Tribunal is a centralised tribunal consisting of a presiding judge and 34 assessors. In principle, appeals received by the Tax Appeal Agency are to be concluded by one of the regional boards. However, the taxpayer is entitled to request that the National Tax Tribunal processes the appeal instead of the competent board. It depends on the specific matter whether the taxpayer wishes the National Tax Tribunal to process the appeal. If the matter is of a legal nature (as opposed to a dispute regarding facts), the taxpayer may prefer that the assessors at the National Tax Tribunal who are lawyers determine his or her case. Should a taxpayer wish to have the case referred to the National Tax Tribunal, the taxpayer must notify the Tax Appeal Agency within four weeks of receiving the decision.

The National Tax Tribunal is also competent if the appeal is considered of significant importance. A case is generally considered to be of significant importance if it involves the public interest, has substantial financial value, concerns EU legislation, or in any other manner is expected to affect a greater number of taxpayers.

In 2015, the processing time for appeals was approximately 23 months.<sup>6</sup>

iii The tax boards of appeal

The tax boards of appeal consist of 19 local boards located all over the country. The boards consist of members elected on the basis of the nomination of the municipal council. The tax boards of appeal process appeals in tax disputes concerning taxable income, property value tax, advance registrations, determination of deductibles, binding rulings and certain other types of taxable income.

In 2015, the processing time for appeals was approximately 15 months.<sup>7</sup>

iv The valuation boards of appeal

The valuation boards of appeal consist of 10 local boards located all over the country. The boards consist of members elected on the basis of the nomination of the municipal council. The valuation boards of appeal process appeals in tax disputes concerning land tax and taxable income on property gain for homeowners. In principle, property gains are not taxable if the property sold served as the owner's house. However, for a property in which part of the land can be registered as a new property without substantive depreciation of the former, the tax authorities may consider any gain on the sale of the property to be a taxable gain. The valuation boards of appeal are competent in processing an appeal regarding the matter of whether a specific property is substantially devaluated by dividing the land.

In 2015, the processing time for appeals was approximately 20 months.<sup>8</sup>

v The motor vehicle boards of appeal

The motor vehicle boards of appeal consist of four boards located across the country. At least two members of each board must be elected from a central organisation for car owners. One of the two members must have expert knowledge in cars, while the other must have

6 See footnote 2.

8 Ibid.

expert knowledge of the commercial aspect of cars. The rest of the members of each board are elected from various car dealership organisations. The motor vehicle boards of appeal are competent in processing appeals regarding registration fees or any tax matter deriving hereof.

In 2015, the processing time for appeals was approximately 13 months .

vi The Ombudsman

Scandinavian countries have a longstanding tradition of having an Ombudsman – a watchdog elected by the Parliament whose position consists of investigating complaints about the public administration, including the tax authorities. The Ombudsman may state criticisms and recommend that the authorities amend a decision already made. However, the Ombudsman is not competent to render decisions itself. Most of the cases revised by the Ombudsman are based on complaints. However, the Ombudsman may also revise cases ex officio.

Previously, the Ombudsman has not been of any particular importance in tax cases, partly due to the complexity of tax legislation, and partly due to the three-month appeal deadline, which meant that the Ombudsman often did not have sufficient time to assess the case prior to the date of the taxpayer's appeal. From a taxpayer point of view, the purpose of the Ombudsman is to act as an independent authority for the purpose of ensuring that all decisions issued by the administrative authorities are in compliance with the applicable procedural rules.

As of 1 January 2017, the Department of Justice has established a seven-member Tax Team within the institution of the Ombudsman. The new Tax Team will consist of members that are familiar with tax legislation and will be tasked with specific questions relating to the Danish tax authorities. Simultaneously, a new rule has been introduced that allows for a suspension of the three-month appeal deadline so that, if the case is brought before the Ombudsman, it does not expire until one month after the Ombudsman has finished looking into the matter. This new rule and the new Tax Team will hopefully encourage the Ombudsman to consider tax cases and tax-related matters.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

i Administrative sanctions

The Danish tax authorities may impose fines in situations where the actions of a taxpayer are deemed to have resulted in an incorrect payment of taxes. The fines are summarised below:

	Unpaid tax amount	Sanction
For gross negligence	Less than 60,000 Danish kroner	One-half of the withheld tax amount
	More than 60,000 Danish kroner	One time the withheld tax amount
For intent	Less than 60,000 Danish kroner	One time the withheld tax amount
	60,000 to 250,000 Danish kroner	Two times the withheld tax amount
For intent (physical persons only)	250,000 to 500,000 Danish kroner	One time the withheld tax amount, plus a prison sentence of between 40 days and five months (subject to criminal prosecution)
	More than 500,000 Danish kroner	One time the withheld tax amount, plus a prison sentence of between six months and eight years (subject to criminal prosecution)
For intent (companies only)	More than 250,000 Danish kroner	Two times the withheld tax amount

If the taxpayer receives an annual assessment of income or VAT that is lower than it should rightfully be and the taxpayer does not correct the assessment, the taxpayer may be subject to a fine equal to one-third of the unpaid amount.

Denmark allows taxpayers to file self-declarations allowing for reduced sanctions. The self-declaration must be voluntary and must be filed before an investigation is initiated by the Danish tax authorities.

	Unpaid tax amount	Sanction
For gross negligence	Regardless of amount	No sanction
For intent	Less than 100,000 Danish kroner	No sanction
	100,000 to 250,000 Danish kroner	One time the withheld tax amount. No determined practice
For intent (physical persons only)	250,000 to 500,000 Danish kroner	One-half of the withheld tax amount plus a suspended prison sentence (subject to criminal prosecution)
	More than 500,000 Danish kroner	One-half of the withheld tax amount plus an unconditioned prison sentence (subject to criminal prosecution)
For intent (companies only)	More than 250,000 Danish kroner	One time the withheld tax amount

ii Criminal penalties

The Danish tax authorities are not authorised to impose criminal penalties on taxpayers (except for fines). If the tax authorities become aware of what they consider a criminal offence, the tax authorities will usually notify the Public Prosecutor for Serious Economic Crime, who will then decide whether to prosecute the case.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

The Danish Corporation Tax Act warrants preliminary tax payments for corporations twice a year. Payment is due on 20 March and 20 November. The annual amount of preliminary tax is assessed on the basis of an average of corporate tax due of three years prior to the relevant income year. Overpaid tax will be offset against the preliminary tax payment due on 20 November in the next income year.

Corporations registered for Danish VAT may recover overpaid VAT by simply adjusting the VAT-able income in their VAT accounts of the specific VAT period. A VAT adjustment must be done within three years after the relevant VAT period. Corporations outside of the EU, which are not registered for Danish VAT, may apply for a VAT refund for VAT paid on services rendered in Denmark if the services are employed in the corporation's business and would have been deductible had the service been rendered to a Danish company.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

See Section II, supra.

iii Claimants

Anyone with a substantial, immediate, individual legal interest may initiate legal proceedings regarding a tax claim.

Following the 2011 decision by the European Court of Justice in Danfoss and Sauer Danfoss,<sup>9</sup> the Danish tax authorities issued a statement (SKM 2015.733 SKAT) increasing the number of claimants, therefore constituting a groundbreaking development within tax procedural law. The Danish tax authorities now acknowledge that any person or corporation subject to, inter alia, erroneous levied VAT and excise duties (in situations where the VAT, etc., is collected contrary to EU law) may claim the overpaid VAT or other tax from the tax authorities. This allows customers to direct claims directly to the tax authorities, even if the customer (as is customary) has paid the VAT or other tax to the supplier.

VI COSTS

In cases before the Administrative Appeal Authority, taxpayers are entitled to a refund of legal costs from the Danish tax authorities. The refund is dependent on the taxpayer's success in the appeal. If the taxpayer wins the case completely or is 'predominantly' successful, the taxpayer is entitled to a 100 per cent refund of his or her legal costs. If the taxpayer is not 'predominantly' successful, the taxpayer is entitled to a 50 per cent refund of his or her legal costs. The expenses covered are the actual expenses, including fees, costs of advisers and expert valuation fees.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

There is currently no alternative to the Administrative Appeal Authority and the courts for tax disputes. In May 2016, the Minister of Taxation suggested a new mediation model for transfer pricing cases, as the processing time was too long when processed in the courts. The suggestion has not yet led to any changes in the current system.

As a method to avoid disputes, and to obtain certainty regarding the tax consequences of a specific transaction, a taxpayer may request the tax authorities to issue a binding ruling. The taxpayer describes the facts, declaring his or her own conviction and submits the request. The tax authorities will then assess the situation and relevant legislation, and (with a few exceptions) issue a ruling providing a binding answer to the taxpayer.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

On 20 June 2016, the European Council adopted the Anti-Tax Avoidance Directive 2016/1164, laying down rules against tax avoidance practices that directly affect the functioning of the internal market. The Directive has not yet been implemented into Danish law; however, a number of the initiatives of the Anti-Tax Avoidance Directive are already known principles in Danish tax law, including a general anti-avoidance rule disallowing advantages from the Parent–Subsidiary Directive, the Interest and Royalties Directive and the Merger Directive in schemes whose sole purpose is minimising or even eliminating the taxable base. Furthermore, the Danish Corporation Tax Act contains, inter alia, legislative measures aimed at avoiding the routing of dividends or interest through intermediaries in low-tax jurisdictions resulting in tax avoidance and aimed at targeting hybrid-instruments.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

DTTs concluded by Denmark are generally based on the OECD Model Treaty. The taxes covered in most Danish DTTs are therefore income taxes and taxes on capital. Excise duty, toll and VAT are not covered by the DTTs.

i VAT

Danish VAT legislation is based on the VAT Directive 2006/112. The VAT rate is 25 per cent and is invariable.

Corporations selling goods liable to VAT or rendering services liable to VAT must register for VAT if the turnover of goods or services liable to VAT exceeds 50,000 Danish kroner annually. The VAT period depends on the corporation's annual turnover, and the deadlines for filing VAT follow the VAT periods. As mentioned in Section V, supra, a correction of income liable to VAT must be registered within three years of the period of VAT becoming due.

A holding company that does not supply goods or services exceeding the thresholds described above will not be required to register for VAT, and accordingly will not be entitled to a VAT deduction. In the Court of Justice of the European Union's recent decision in Larentia + Minerva,<sup>10</sup> the Court found that companies may recover VAT on costs connected with the acquisition of shares in subsidiaries they intend to manage by the provision of administrative services liable to VAT. In October 2016, the Western Danish High Court allowed the submission of a preliminary ruling to clarify whether this also applies to an intended, but not completed, sale of subsidiary shares, to which a company had delivered administrative services liable to VAT.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

One area of focus for the Danish tax authorities is the distinction between operational costs, and set-up and establishment costs. A number of cases have touched on this topic in the past five years. The Danish Eastern High Court recently passed a judgment in a leading case regarding a bank's right to deduct salaries of employees performing tasks relating to the bank's acquisition of another bank. In general, operational costs are tax-deductible for corporations; it therefore came as something of a surprise when the Eastern High Court in its decision stated that the part of the employees' salaries that could be allocated to tasks performed in relation to the acquisition of the other bank was not deductible. As this finding is quite a revolutionary change to the previously established case law, the Eastern High Court decided – in spite of its ruling – to allow the bank a deduction for the salaries, as the bank had a legitimate expectation of the deductibility of the salaries. The judgments have been appealed to the Supreme Court by the Ministry of Taxation.

10 Case C-108/14 & C-109/14.

Transfer pricing has been a main focus area of the tax authorities in recent years, and a vast number of transfer pricing cases are currently pending before the National Tax Tribunal.

Another focus area are those beneficial ownership cases in which the tax authorities claim that intermediate holding companies are not the beneficial owners of dividends or interest payments received from Danish subsidiaries, and that accordingly withholding tax should have been withheld on dividends and interest payments. A number of these cases are pending before the Danish high courts, and in some of the cases questions have been referred to the European Court of Justice.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

The Danish system of tax dispute resolution is fairly regulated and the appeal system is, compared to other tax jurisdictions, effective and inexpensive for the taxpayer. The system's greatest flaw is possibly that of being too conservative: we do not have methods for alternative dispute resolution in tax matters, and the tax authorities fear preliminary hearings at the European Court of Justice to the extent that, in more than half of cases, they ask the courts not to confer them before the European Court of Justice. Perhaps we prize sovereignty in matters of tax too highly, and fear that the introduction of new methods, and the EU's growing involvement in VAT matters, will end up shattering the system that we know and, more importantly, limiting the Danish tax authorities' control.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

I INTRODUCTION

The Dominican Republic is a unitary state with a central government. Taxes can only be levied by the Congress of the Dominican Republic,<sup>2</sup> and collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue (DGII) under the supervision of the Ministry of Finance (Law 227-06). Taxation is governed by Law No. 11-92 of 31 May 1992, commonly known as the Tax Code, as amended, by regulations issued by the Executive Branch, and by resolutions adopted by the DGII. The Dominican Tax Code establishes the general rules for all the administrative and judicial procedures, and establishes the main taxes – income tax, capital gains tax, value added tax, property tax, luxury tax, corporate asset tax – based on a simple, territorial system where the taxes are levied at the source.

The Constitution of the Dominican Republic establishes an equal protection clause for non-Dominican citizens and investors:<sup>3</sup> Article 25 of the Constitution expressly states that foreign nationals are entitled to the same rights and duties in the Dominican Republic as Dominican nationals, except – understandably – for the right to take part in political activities.<sup>4</sup> Article 221 of the Constitution sets forth that the government will ensure equal treatment under the law for local and foreign individuals and companies.

Although tax evasion is only sanctioned with criminal penalties in cases of intentional tax fraud, tax compliance has been steadily on the rise due to the invoicing system established for the collection of VAT:<sup>5</sup> any expense can only be claimed and deducted if supported by an official invoice with an official number registered and granted by the DGII. This system was introduced in 2007 and has revolutionised the Dominican tax system, providing the tax authorities with a powerful tool to detect evasion of VAT and income tax, both for individuals and entities. Due to this and many other procedures, the DGII is considered by many to be the most modern and organised of all the public offices in the Dominican Republic.<sup>6</sup>

2 There are some exceptions; for example, municipalities impose or collect taxes for construction or advertising. The Dominican Congress is bicameral: it is composed of a Senate and a Chamber of Deputies.

3 Individuals or entities.

4 Based on this principle, the Dominican Constitutional Tribunal struck down an old statute that established a higher inheritance tax for non-resident foreigners.

Tax disputes are usually avoided for the following reasons: any taxpayer can request from the DGII a formal and binding opinion for his or her particular case beforehand;<sup>7</sup> the fines and interest for late payments can very often be negotiated with the DGII;<sup>8</sup> and before starting litigation, there is a mandatory administrative procedure that suspends the possible tax obligations and gives both parties the opportunity to explain their positions and settle the dispute. In general, only cases that involve fundamental legal questions<sup>9</sup> or that are clear-cut<sup>10</sup> end up in court: taxpayers are well aware that litigation does not stop interest and fines from accumulating, although it does prevent the tax authorities from collecting while it is pending.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

The process usually starts without any prior warning with a written notice by the DGII to the taxpayer assessing the taxpayer's liability under a particular statute.<sup>11</sup> The liability could arise from not filing a specific tax return – such as the yearly income tax return, monthly tax return for VAT or a specific declaration in regards to transfer pricing rules<sup>12</sup> – from not paying a specific tax, such as the property tax, corporate asset tax, VAT, capital gains tax, etc., or from the DGII disputing a filed return. The notice establishes a new deadline for the pending tax return or the specific amount of tax that is due, assessing the taxpayer with the corresponding fines for the non-compliance.

Upon receipt of this notice, the taxpayer can immediately either start to negotiate a settlement with the DGII or file an objection within 20 days,<sup>13</sup> attaching all the necessary documents and evidence. Once the objection is filed, the payment of the taxes and penalties is suspended until the DGII has ruled on the objection. Upon request by the taxpayer, the 6 The official website of the DGII (www.dgii.gov.do) is one of the most visited websites in the Dominican Republic, containing the most relevant information for taxpayers and also allowing them to file their tax returns online.

7 This can serve as an advanced clearance.

8 The capital gains taxes for the sale of Verizon Dominicana were negotiated directly between the Dominican President, Leonel Fernandez, and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the US, Condoleezza Rice.

DGII can grant an additional 30 days to the taxpayer to substantiate the objection. The DGII has to decide on the objection within three months. After this internal administrative ruling, the DGII can start the collection procedure and attach the assets of the taxpayer.<sup>14</sup>

This procedure applies to all taxpayers and all taxes. The general statute of limitations for tax collection is three years,<sup>15</sup> starting one day after the filing or the payment was due.<sup>16</sup>

III TAX COURTS

If the DGII rejects the objection filed by the taxpayer, a recourse can be filed in the tax court against the administrative ruling within 15 days. The decision of the tax court, composed of a minimum of three judges, is subject to review as follows: review by the same tax court under specific circumstances;<sup>17</sup> cassation procedure at the Third Chamber of the Supreme Court;<sup>18</sup> and review by the Constitutional Court.<sup>19</sup>

In cases of excessive delays of the DGII to resolve certain matters, a taxpayer can file a writ of amparo, a quick and inexpensive remedy for the protection of constitutionally protected rights. In tax matters, this is filed at the same tax court as other matters; the decision by the tax court is subject to appeal before the Constitutional Court.

In the case of urgency when no constitutional issue is involved, the taxpayer can seek an injunction in the tax court.

All cases in Dominican courts are decided by judges, not juries. Judges rule based on the texts of the Constitution and existing statutes, the precedents of the Constitutional Court (which are binding) and the precedents of other courts (which are not binding). They do not rule in equity, as in some common law countries, but the principle of good faith is recognised by statutory law, which grants courts some discretion.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

The Tax Code distinguishes between fines, for simple non-compliance, and criminal sanctions, in cases of intentional tax fraud. According to Article 46 of the Tax Code, the DGII can impose fines on a taxpayer without prior authorisation from the courts. As previously mentioned, non-compliance notices usually contain a fine: for example, a fixed amount of 25,790 Dominican pesos for a pending income tax return, or a percentage of the taxes owed per month (11.1 per cent for the first month and 5.1 per cent for each following month). In cases of tax evasion, there can be an additional fine of up to twice the amount of taxes owed.

18 The Third Chamber of the Supreme Court, as the other two chambers, is composed of five judges. Three of them have to rule on each case.

19 In cases of constitutional issues. The Constitutional Tribunal consists of 13 judges; cases are adjudicated with a super majority of nine or more members.

Only in cases of intentional tax fraud<sup>20</sup> are criminal penalties triggered. They consist of penalties between two and 10 times the amount of the evaded tax and imprisonment of between six months and two years. These penalties must be imposed by a court following criminal proceedings.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

The Tax Code provides a specific procedure for the return of any amount paid in excess or paid without an obligation to do so. The Tax Code actually obligates the executive branch to set up a special fund to reimburse the taxpayer in these cases.<sup>21</sup> The taxpayer can file for the refund at the DGII in an administrative procedure, provided that he or she is up to date with all his or her fiscal obligations. The DGII has to rule on the request within two months. In the normal course of events, the DGII either rejects the request, which can then be appealed before the tax court, or just does not respond. In this latter case, the amount of the requested refund automatically becomes a tax credit, allowing the taxpayer to compensate it against future taxes.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

The same procedure applies as described above.

iii Claimants

The persons liable for the tax obligation, the corresponding possible fines and criminal penalties are, in addition to the taxpayer, their legal representatives, their assistants, their withholding agents and the persons who acquire assets from them in transactions subject to taxation.<sup>22</sup>

VI COSTS

The costs of any dispute, administrative or judicial, consist basically of the legal fees for the attorney. These fees usually cannot be recovered from the opposing party, no matter the outcome of the administrative or legal procedure. With the exception of the general procedures at the tax court against a ruling of the DGII, all other legal procedures (amparo, cassation, reviews) do not generate court costs for any of the parties involved.

20 For example, having two sets of books.

21 Article 265 of the Tax Code. The amount is 0.5 per cent of the total amount of taxes collected each month. In reality, this fund does not exist and refunds in cash are very rare.

22 Article 11 of the Tax Code.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

There is no alternative dispute resolution in tax matters in the Dominican Republic. Law 489-08 on Commercial Arbitration explicitly prohibits arbitration in public matters such as tax matters.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

The Tax Code includes a general anti-avoidance provision whereby the tax authorities may ignore the existence of legal entities or certain transactions when used to secure a tax advantage, based on the substance over form doctrine.<sup>23</sup> However, the provision has been applied only in high-profile cases, such as the sale by Verizon of the largest phone company in the country. Verizon argued that no capital gains taxes were due since the transaction was done through the sale of shares in an offshore company, outside of the territory of the Dominican Republic, that controlled the Dominican subsidiary. The DGII countered that the only purpose of the transaction was the acquisition of the local telecom business of the company, and that, therefore, capital gains taxes had to be paid, the real purpose of the offshore corporate structure being to artificially locate the capital gains in an offshore jurisdiction. The case was settled, and Verizon paid a substantial amount of the original sum demanded by the DGII. As a result of this case, the Tax Code was amended and now expressly states that the sale of shares of foreign companies having assets, directly or indirectly, in the Dominican Republic are to be considered as taking place in the Dominican Republic, and therefore subject to Dominican capital gains taxes.<sup>24</sup>

With the tax reform of 2012, much more extensive transfer pricing rules were established and, for the first time, rules on thin capitalisation. The latter have not yet become an area of focus for the DGII. Transfer pricing instead has become one of its priorities.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

The Dominican Republic has signed and ratified two double taxation treaties: with Canada, in 1977, and with Spain, in March 2014. The treaty with Canada only covers income taxes, and has become obsolete with regard to taxes on dividends since the 2012 tax reform abolished the provision to avoid double taxation on company profits and introduced a 10 per cent dividend tax. The new treaty with Spain deals with all the possible taxes on income, but not with VAT. Considering that many hotel owners and operators in the Dominican Republic are Spanish, the treaty with Spain has much more relevance than the one with Canada.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

The main focus of the DGII is on collecting VAT taxes and income taxes through the invoicing system described in Section I, supra. Since only expenses supported by an official invoice can be deducted for tax purposes, businesses are forced to use these official invoices, which are then automatically subject to VAT and income tax. In addition, services rendered by foreigners in the Dominican Republic – for example, in the tourism or mining industry – can now easily be identified and taxed correspondingly. Furthermore, the DGII has widened the application of VAT taxes, attempting to collect 1 per cent on imports from members of Proindustria, the Centre for Industrial Development and Competitiveness, as an advance on the VAT tax. Most likely, this will be disputed soon, since these members have been exempt from advancing any VAT taxes.

23 Article 2 of the Tax Code.

24 From a legal perspective, it is questionable whether this amendment was really necessary. In our opinion, the general anti-avoidance rule was and is sufficient.

Capital gains are also being targeted by the DGII in corporate transactions, such as sales of shares, contributions in kind, and mergers and acquisitions. Very often, the necessary approval of the transaction by the DGII already provides an assessment of the capital gains taxes due.

In the area of tax avoidance, the most targeted scheme is transfer pricing. There has been a coordinated effort to crack down on transfer pricing schemes, especially in the hotel and tourism industry. The Dominican Republic now has extensive rules on this matter, and the DGII is determined to find and eliminate any possible schemes. Other schemes of tax avoidance, such as treaty shopping, dividend stripping or controlled foreign corporation schemes to park dividends abroad, are still not targeted by the DGII, mainly because no specific rules exist in this regard.

Another target is the collection of the transfer tax for real estate and vehicle sales. In the past decade, the DGII has established minimum fiscal values for these transactions to eradicate the old habit of using two sets of contracts: one with the true price and one with a lower price for tax purposes. There is also now a six-month deadline to pay the tax, and fines in the case of non-compliance.

The final area of focus is the collection of taxes on dividends (10 per cent) from free zone operators for any dividends generated after 5 October 2016.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

There is no doubt that the authorities in the Dominican Republic are focused on increasing tax compliance and collection. Considering the growing debt of the country, the International Monetary Fund has been pressuring for better results in both areas, and has tried to convince the Dominican Republic to abolish tax exemption laws, especially the ones benefiting the tourism industry (Law 158-01). Considering that the Dominican Republic recently extended these incentives, the pressure by the IMF and the international community to collect taxes is higher than ever. There is still a large part of the economy that is operating in the shadows and outside the official invoicing system. There have been many suggestions and ideas to change that through an extensive tax reform, but so far nothing concrete is on the table.

It is likely that the Dominican Republic will negotiate new double tax treaties in the future, especially with the United States and European Union countries.

With these possible developments, tax planning and tax consulting will become more and more important for anyone doing business in the Dominican Republic, confirming once more that tax law shapes the nature of almost every important business transaction and has a significant impact on the way corporations behave.

ECUADOR

I INTRODUCTION

In Ecuador, the administration of justice in tax and customs matters is in charge of the district court of tax disputes (TDCT), a jurisdictional entity with sectoral competence, and the Special Tax Litigation Chamber of the National Court of Justice (CNJ) as the appellate body with national jurisdiction, based in Quito.

Tax dispute jurisdiction consists of the public authority to consider and resolve disputes arising between tax administrations and taxpayers or those responsible for acts that determine tax obligations or establish responsibilities, and the consequences of legal relations arising from the application of laws, regulations or resolutions related to tax matters.

Litigation in tax and customs matters has been gradually increasing, with the main defendant in this area being the Internal Revenue Service (SRI), the institution responsible for collection of the principal taxes such as income tax and value added tax. The SRI has modified the tax culture in Ecuador by turning tax collection into the main income for the state.

In 1998, a deep restructuring process of the tax authority in Ecuador was initiated, as well as a modernisation of auditing and tax control systems, which resulted in an increase in tax assessment acts and, accordingly, an increase in lawsuits brought by taxpayers against these acts.

Because of the backlog of court cases in taxation, litigation in tax matters (i.e., the procedure of challenging an administrative act for determining a tax liability in the courts) used to last between four and seven years under the former Procedural Code.

However, upon the enforcement of the new Procedural Code (COGEP) in May 2016, it is expected that the lawsuits heard by the TDCT will last no more than four to six months, because litigation on tax matters is reduced to two hearings only. The first is known as the ‘preliminary hearing’, where the parties submit their arguments for their claim and answer the claim, and announce the proofs to be submitted at the proceeding. Within 30 days after the preliminary hearing, the ‘hearing to pronounce judgment’ takes place, where the parties submit the evidence announced previously and once again present the arguments for their defence. During this hearing, the TDCT is empowered to pronounce judgment orally or to give written notice of its judgment to the parties within 10 days after the hearing.

One factor that increases the cost of litigation in tax matters is the condition that must be met by any person who intends to bring an action against an act in which a tax liability is determined: a bond or security equivalent to 10 per cent of the contested obligation must be paid. If this bond is not paid (which may be satisfied through a cash payment, a bank or insurance guarantee, or similar), the claim must be set aside by the judges hearing it. In the event of a judgment in favour of the taxpayer, the amount lodged as a guarantee must be returned to the taxpayer and, in the case of an unfavourable decision, the amount is charged to the total sum demanded by the tax administration.

In the event of an appeal heard before the CNJ’s Special Tax Litigation Chamber, and to suspend the effect of the trial court judgment, the law requires the taxpayer to pay a second bond, which is usually set between 5 and 10 per cent of the contested amount rather than a specific fee.

In addition to the costs of bringing lawsuits or appeals in tax matters, should the judgment be against the taxpayer, the Tax Code (COT) requires the payment of interest at a rate equivalent to 1.5 times the current reference lending rate determined by the Central Bank of Ecuador (i.e., approximately 13 per cent per annum; interest accrues notwithstanding the duration of the contestation process).

Furthermore, in addition to the costs of contesting tax determination acts through court proceedings, the tax administration has the legal obligation to impose a 20 per cent sanction or surcharge on any tax liability that is determined. The taxpayer has no option to reduce or avoid this surcharge; if the tax liability is confirmed by a judge, this confirmation necessarily brings with it the obligation of paying the 20 per cent surcharge.

To summarise, and as will subsequently be explained, non-payment of taxes in Ecuador and the initiation of legal proceedings before the courts can be a costly business for taxpayers, even under the COGEP and its principles of oral procedures and expeditiousness.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Legal actions on tax matters can only be initiated by the taxpayer, and the TDCT has jurisdiction to hear challenges against legislative acts on tax matters, and against acts that determine taxes, penalties or other charges that are exclusively related to tax matters. The TDCT also has jurisdiction over direct actions that seek the recovery of an amount unduly paid.

Once the tax required by a particular tax administration has been determined, taxpayers have two alternatives: file a complaint with the tax administration responsible for the act (a claim that must be resolved within 120 days) or bring a suit before the TDCT. As a rule, the taxpayer has 20 business days to file a complaint with the tax administration or 60 business days to bring a suit before the TDCT. After said term, the obligation determined takes effect and therefore is enforceable through a compulsory collection proceeding.

In exceptional cases, and only for issues restrictively identified in the COT, the taxpayer or the tax authority has three years counted from the notification of an administrative act to bring an appeal for review to the highest administrative authority. This appeal does not have a term to answer and does not suspend the effects of the contested measure. If the decision is against the taxpayer, the taxpayer may challenge it before the TDCT within the same 60 business days specified above.

The entitlement of the tax administration to determine a tax liability expires in six years counted from the date that the deadline to file the tax return lapsed, when not declared in whole or in part; three years counted from the date of the tax return for which the law requires determination by the taxpayer; or one year in the case of verification of a determination act undertaken by the taxing agency or, in a mixed manner, counted from the notification date of such acts.

The term of the tax administration's entitlement to determine a tax liability is interrupted with the notification of the 'order of determination' to the taxpayer (i.e., the tax authority's decision to initiate a formal examination process that concludes with the determination of a tax liability).

i Determination process before the SRI

The tax determination process begins with notice of the determination order, which may be given to the taxpayer within three years following the date when the relevant tax return was filed. Once notification of the determination order has been given, the tax administration is allowed one additional year to request the necessary information and to issue a tax determination act. In other words, in general terms the SRI is allowed approximately four years to exercise its powers to determine and demand payment of the relevant taxes.

Once notice of the determination order has been given, the verification process (cross-checking information) begins. This process is completed when a draft determination certificate is issued. A draft determination has no legal effect because it is a preparatory act, but the purpose is to inform the taxpayer of the audit results and the differences that have been found regarding the audited tax.

The taxpayer then has 20 business days to exercise its right to object and to file its objections and justifications against this draft determination certificate by presenting all the necessary documentation to justify the differences found by the authority. In this instance, both legal issues and documentary support and accounting matters are discussed.

After these 20 business days, the SRI verifies and analyses the documents and arguments submitted by the taxpayer and issues the final determination, which is a purely administrative act.

Once given notice of the final tax determination certificate, the taxpayer has 20 business days to challenge (to appeal) before the tax administration that issued the determination act or 60 business days to bring a suit before the TDCT.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

The TDCT is the competent entity to resolve conflicts in tax and customs matters, and above this entity is the CNJ's Special Tax Litigation Chamber, the highest jurisdictional body.

There is reiterated case law stating that an appeal heard by the CNJ does not act as a second instance, but rather that it is exclusively limited to analysing defects of procedure or of law committed by the TDCT, whether in a ruling or while the process was being prosecuted at that level. Therefore, such reiterated case law indicates that the appeal of cassation is an extraordinary remedy that does not allow the assessment of evidence; nor is it a dispute process (there is no lawsuit nor an answer to the suit or litigation). Since it is an extraordinary remedy, its invocation is extremely formal, and is appropriate only in cases exhaustively specified by law as listed below:

- a* undue application, lack of application or mistaken application of provisions of the law, including mandatory case law precedents;
- b* undue application, lack of application or mistaken interpretation of procedural rules when they have vitiated the process with insurmountable nullity or have given rise to defencelessness;
- c* undue application, lack of application or mistaken interpretation of juridical precepts applicable to valuation of proofs;
- d* a resolution in the ruling or writ regarding matters not pertaining to the litigation, or omission to resolve all items in litigation; and
- e* when the ruling or writ does not include the requirements stated in the law, or if the resolutions adopt contradictory or incompatible decisions.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Constitution in force in Ecuador since 2008 establishes an extraordinary action in constitutional matters for the protection of constitutional rights and the due process in court decisions, final orders and resolutions with the force of judgments where rights recognised in the Constitution have been violated by action or omission.

This action, therefore, may be lodged against judgments handed down by the highest court in tax dispute matters (CNJ), even when its scope is very limited.

i Internal review

We have already stated that the tax authorities have the power to initiate a review of their own actions through an extraordinary review procedure. Parallel to this, the tax administration is empowered, after giving notice of the final determination act to the taxpayer, to issue a second determination act voiding the first one. The foregoing is applicable as long as the tax administration is within the period allowed to make the relevant tax determination, and provided that the first tax determination act has not been challenged before the litigious tax jurisdiction. In this regard, in an interesting judgment, the CNJ determined that this latter power – of verifying determination acts – is appropriate only to the extent that the original act of determination has not been ruled by the taxpayer before the TDCT. If there has been an objection lodged against the original act of determination, the tax authorities will not have jurisdiction to verify that act.

Detailed below is part of a relevant ruling issued by the CNJ in appeal of cassation No. 282-2010:

6.1.4. The initial effects of the legal challenge of the first certificates of determination, as stated above, do not suspend the exercise of the administration's determinative capacity, as it is not the issue that is in question when there is a judicial challenge, but it does create a suspensive effect on the enforceability of the certificate, which is why the tax authorities must consequently wait for the pronouncement of the judge to act [...]. 6.1.6. This action of the tax administration obstructs the administration of justice on contested acts, goes against the principles governing the judicial process as the system or means for the administration of justice, that of the effective judicial protection of rights, that of the obligation to administer justice, and that of the contestability of administrative acts in this court.

ii Establishment of courts and appellate levels

Five TDCTs existed by October 2014, each with respective chambers and each comprising three judges and a secretary. However, after an internal restructuring process ordered by the Judiciary Council (which regulates all matters relating to justice in Ecuador), the chambers of the various TDCTs were eliminated and new judges were appointed for each proceeding. According to this measure, the TDCT currently comprises several judges, and in each lawsuit already commenced or to be commenced the three judges corresponding to it will be designated through the computer system.

The judges of the different TDCTs are independent and act as judicial officers. However, it is common that TDCT or CNJ judges are former tax administration officials, mainly from the SRI.

It is always the taxpayer who initiates the legal process before the TDCT. Nevertheless, an appeal of cassation to the CNJ may be brought by either the taxpayer or the tax administration; however, as a formal appeal, this can be rejected through a writ of prohibition. If a partial judgment is issued by the TDCT (partly in favour of the taxpayer and partly in favour of the tax authorities), it may be the case that two appeals are made against the same judgment, each with different arguments.

This appeal of cassation must be filed before the same TDCT judges that issued the judgment. Those judges used to consider whether the appeal met all formal requirements established by law; however, after the entry into force of the COGEP, they must only verify if the appeal was filed within 10 business days after notice of the judgment was served, and then must deliver the process to the CNJ for the latter to rule on the admissibility of the action or, alternatively, to reject it.

i What to expect from a tax dispute

If the SRI is the respondent tax authority, we can expect a well-structured defence (the tax authority has a legal obligation to defend itself in a contestation process, with no option to acquiesce to the lawsuit or compromise in any circumstances).

We can also expect the issue to be dealt with by judges who are just starting their work as administrators of justice (since more than half of the judges of the TDCT have less than five years' experience as judges), and it is likely to be a long and costly process.

During 2014, two out of three judges of the CNJ's Special Tax Litigation Chamber were temporarily suspended from their duties following allegations by the SRI's Director General that one of their decisions – favourable to the taxpayer – was damaging to the interests of the state. We believe that this could motivate TDCT and CNJ judges to be more cautious regarding the economic impact of their decisions on the state.

ii Criminal penalties

With regard to criminal sanctions, the COT was in force from 1975 until August 2014 and contains an entire chapter on tax illegality. However, after the Integral Criminal Code (COIP) came into effect in August 2014, the chapter in the COT regarding tax illegality was expressly repealed and new specific chapters regarding tax illegality were included.

This change in the legal framework regarding tax illegality raised substantial questions on this subject. The main one, in our opinion, is the elimination of intent (fraud) in tax defrauding offences. In other words, currently a fraudulent action does not require intent to be penalised as such; having merely perpetrated the action (culpable offence) suffices. According to the COIP, tax defrauding is understood to be any act of simulation, concealment, omission, misrepresentation or deception leading to an error in the determination of the tax liability, or acts that result in failure to pay all or part of the taxes actually due, for the taxpayer's own benefit or that of a third party, as well as any fraudulent conduct that contravenes or impedes the work of control, determination and sanction exerted by the tax administration.

In cases of fraud, the following are the most frequent:

- a* providing false or adulterated information or declarations on goods, figures, facts, circumstances or backgrounds that influence the determination of tax liability (false, incomplete or disfigured data);
- b* the wilful omission of income, and the inclusion of costs, deductions, rebates or withholdings that are non-existent or in excess of that legally due;
- c* the wilful alteration of computerised accounting records or books of accounts, notes, entries or operations related to the economic activity as well as false accounting records of accounts, names, quantities or data;
- d* deliberately undertaking double accounting;
- e* simulating one or more acts or contracts to obtain or grant a benefit of a subsidy, reduction, exemption or fiscal stimulus;
- f* undue and wilful recognition or appropriation of a refund of taxes, interest or penalties, so established by a firm or enforceable act of the tax administration or competent court;
- g* if the tax return includes false, incomplete, distorted or adulterated data; and
- h* other items.

Depending on the type of fraud that is committed, prison sentences can range from five to seven years.

With regard to financial penalties, these are divided into regulatory violations and offences. Violations are punishable for lack of compliance with the tax laws and are sanctioned monetarily with fines from US$30 to US$1,500, while regulatory offences are punishable for lack of compliance with tax regulations and are sanctioned monetarily with fines from US$30 to US$1,000.

Additionally, the legislation provides for penalties such as closure of the establishment or business, suspension of activities, confiscation, definitive seizure, suspension or cancellation of entries in public registers, suspension or cancellation of patents and licences, and suspension or removal from public positions. However, the most commonly used penalty is the suspension of activities and closure of an establishment.

Furthermore, a tax reform was enacted as of 2015 whereby 'any income received by corporations and individuals residing in Ecuador, including non-justified equity increment' is considered to be income deriving from an Ecuadorian source. Non-justified equity increment is understood to occur when any income – whether subject to taxation or exempted – is lower with respect to the consumptions, expenditures, savings and investments of one person in one or several fiscal periods.

Initial and final balances of the fiscal periods determined will be taken into account to verify the existence of such non-justified increment. Taxpayers will have the opportunity to justify any non-justified differences greater than 10 basic fractions not subject to taxation (US$111,700 in 2016) through revenues obtained during the performance of the economic activity; transfers of goods or services gratuitously or deriving from inheritances or legacies; and adjustments and corrections due to currency devaluation or appreciation, inflation, or impairment or depreciation of assets.

Proof must be provided through any evidentiary means admitted in tax matters (documentary evidence, testimonial evidence and, generally, all evidentiary proofs, with the exception of judicial confession by a public official). If the non-justified patrimonial increment cannot be justified through any of the above means, the Tax Administration may give notice to the Public Prosecutor so that it may commence a criminal proceeding based on the unjustified private enrichment offence, which is penalised with three to five years' imprisonment.

i Recovering overpaid tax

Cases where for some reason (error in a tax return, accumulated tax credits, etc.) taxpayers have overpaid the amount of the tax due (payment in excess) or, alternatively, have paid taxes that were not due (overpayment), are frequent.

Therefore, if a taxpayer has paid taxes in excess of that required by law, it has the right to request the return of the overpaid or wrongly paid amounts. This taxpayer action (claim) lapses after three years counted from the date when payment is made and must be answered by the tax authorities through a resolution within a period not to exceed 120 business days.

Currently, the tax authority is undergoing liquidity problems. Therefore, although many taxpayers obtain favourable resolutions regarding return of their taxes, the tax authority usually delays the transfer of those funds to the taxpayers' accounts. That is why, during the past two years, taxpayers as well as the tax authority have opted for the issuance of credit vouchers. Credit vouchers are used for paying any taxes administered by the tax authority and may be freely transferred to other taxpayers for that same purpose. With them, taxpayers who have obtained favourable decisions regarding the return of their taxes quickly obtain liquidity by selling the credit vouchers.

If the decision is negative for the taxpayer, it may challenge said decision before the TDCT in a contestation action for undue payment or overpayment.

Notwithstanding the above, there may be a case where a taxpayer has initiated proceedings before the TDCT regarding an administrative act that requires the payment of a tax but during the course of the judicial process, and to avoid the accrual of interest and reduce any relevant risks decides to pay said tax liability. In such a specific case, two alternatives are open to the taxpayer: to discontinue the trial, and be liable for an order for court costs; or to pursue the contestation action as a challenge for improper payment or overpayment.

The latter is increasingly used by taxpayers, and in cases of a favourable decision for the taxpayer, the tax administration must return the amount paid by the taxpayer plus the corresponding legal interest. The tax administration must pay the same interest that would arise if the taxpayer were the debtor (i.e., about 13 per cent annually).

ii Challenging administrative decisions

If the tax administration issues an administrative act with general legal effects (regulations) that violates any of the rights and principles enshrined in the Constitution, it may be the subject of a public action challenging its constitutionality; such an action aims to declare the resolution unconstitutional and thus remove it from the legal system generally. This action must be brought before the Constitutional Court.

On the other hand, if the tax administration issues an administrative act with general legal effects that violates any of the provisions of the Internal Tax Regime Law (LORTI) or the COT (statutory rules), it may be challenged through a contestation action before the TDCT. This action seeks to declare the illegality of the administrative act and, therefore, to remove it from the legal system.

If the tax administration issues an administrative act with individual legal effects (a tax assessment certificate) that violates any of the rights and principles enshrined in the Constitution, it can be challenged through a protective action before the Constitutional Court, which aims to suspend the effects of the administrative act.

Finally, if the tax administration issues an administrative act with individual legal effects that violates any provisions of the LORTI or the COT, it can be challenged through a contestation lawsuit before the TDCT. This lawsuit is the one typically used by taxpayers against tax assessment acts.

iii Claimants

In Ecuador, any taxpayer may make requests or complaints to the tax administration. Faced with an unfavourable resolution of the complaint, the taxpayer, as we have seen, may file a complaint with the tax administration itself or initiate legal proceedings before the TDCT (subject to the penalty of court costs).

In the event that there is shared involvement among several taxpayers or if the same administrative decision generates legal effects for several taxpayers, even though the current tax legislation does not provide for joint actions, procedurally, under the principle of judicial economy and speed, we see that there is no conflict in this.

The COT explicitly prohibits the recipients of tax exemptions from taking over the duties, established by law, of a taxable person, as well as extending, in whole or in part, the benefit of exemption in any way to non-exempt taxpayers. It is not possible, therefore, to claim an overpayment to be transferred from one taxpayer to another. Notwithstanding this, it is possible, in the trial stage, for a taxpayer to transfer to another taxpayer its litigation rights over the judicial process it has begun.

VI COSTS

In Ecuador, the court costs regime is regulated by tax legislation, especially when a taxpayer drops a court case or it is declared abandoned due to lack of momentum. According to the COGEP, which came into effect in May 2016, any lawsuit being heard at the TDCT will be declared abandoned if it has not been processed within 80 business days. This measure is being applied more frequently by the TDCT judges.

Before the CNJ's Special Tax Litigation Chamber, court costs will be paid by the claimant whenever the appeal has been declared void or if it is manifestly apparent that it was brought without legal basis or for the purpose of delaying the enforcement of the judgment.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Conflicts in tax matters are not susceptible to being resolved through an alternative dispute resolution method; therefore, there can be no compromises or negotiations over them.

The only way to reach some sort of agreement with the tax authority on tax liability is in respect of payment facilities (i.e., a term given to the taxpayer for payment of the obligation during which the interest referred to previously accrues).

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Organic Law for the Remission of Interest, Penalties and Surcharges was published on 5 May 2015 with the main purpose of collecting taxes through remission of interest, penalties and surcharges deriving from internal tax and fiscal obligations whose administration or collection is solely in charge of the SRI, as long as taxpayers pay their pending tax liabilities (principal only). Therefore, although the publication of that Law is not, by itself, an alternative solution to resolve disputes, it is used by many taxpayers as a mechanism to ‘clean up’ their pending tax liabilities or by those undergoing a lawsuit. The Law was welcomed by taxpayers who had disputes with the litigious tax jurisdiction because, in many cases, interest either exceeded or doubled the tax (principal). Therefore, actual savings were obtained through the application of the law. The final result of this Law was the dismissal of a great number of tax lawsuits involving substantial amounts, as well as collection of approximately US$971.69 million by the tax authority.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Since 2008, Ecuador has pursued a strict tax policy aimed at preventing tax evasion, mostly limiting unjustified enrichment, and the use of tax havens or lower tax regimes.

Thus, as of fiscal year 2008, legislation was implemented that would restrict the deductibility of a series of costs paid abroad, and the application of transfer pricing for any kinds of transaction with related parties.

The Organic Law on Incentives to Production and Prevention of Tax Fraud came into effect on 1 January 2015, with the principal objective to eliminate tax shields that have the purpose of evading and eluding tax payments through tax havens. In the same vein, together with the implementation of rules that limit transactions and expense deductions, forms of coercion to enforce compliance and the payment of tax obligations required by the tax administration have also been strengthened, especially the use of precautionary measures as well as increased penalties. This Law has further restricted the use of tax elusion or evasion mechanisms by penalising, through a substantial tax load, the use of foreign fiscal vehicles or tax planning or patrimonial structures abroad. In keeping with the foregoing, on 23 October 2015, the executive branch submitted a new bill on inheritances, legacies and donations setting forth a number of restrictions and legal presumptions against trusts established abroad.

Precautionary measures are frequently used by tax administrations, especially the SRI. The most controversial case is still the seizure and auction of goods from one of the country’s largest banana companies due to a tax liability of US$45 million, which, when interest was added, exceeded US$90 million.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

Ecuador currently has DTTs with the following 15 countries: Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, France, Germany, Italy, Korea, Mexico, Romania, Spain, Switzerland and Uruguay. It also has one subregional agreement to prevent tax evasion with the Andean Community (Peru and Colombia).

In practice, these treaties are not frequently used by taxpayers, despite the fact that in public international law they have supra-constitutional hierarchy. In Ecuador, the applicability of these treaties is restricted by procedural requirements contained in the Regulations for the Implementation of the Internal Tax Regime Law (RLRTI).

Therefore, the RLRTI has set the following requirements or conditions for the use of DTTs: a certificate of tax residence of the foreign taxpayer and beneficiary of payments made from Ecuador, and an independent auditors' report on the taxation of said income abroad. These two requirements added by the RLRTI have greatly limited the use of said treaties.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

One of the more recent cases that has been the subject of discussion and controversy within the tax field relates to the decision issued by the CNJ regarding appeal of cassation No. 282-2010 (see Section III, supra) on the deductibility of expenditure on interest payments for external credits to related companies abroad.

According to the SRI's criteria, external credits granted to taxpayers in Ecuador by related parties abroad do not constitute actual loans, but are equity contributions or provision of funds.

To put this in context, in Ecuador before fiscal year 2008, interest payments abroad paid on foreign loans were not subject to withholding and were therefore deductible, provided this was registered with the Central Bank of Ecuador and the interest rate did not exceed the rate set by that institution. Nevertheless, due to high utilisation of said tax benefit, the SRI began to challenge the deductibility of these payments on the basis that, in essence, this relationship was not a true external credit but an equity contribution or provision of funds from abroad (i.e., the taxpayer was using a legal instrument – foreign loans – to send money abroad without paying the accompanying tax by using a tax benefit – payment of interest without withholding at source).

This criterion was accepted by the CNJ's Special Tax Litigation Chamber in six different judgments, except in the judgment for appeal No. 282-2010 wherein it accepted the deductibility of expenditure for the payment of interest for external credits to related parties.

In said ruling, it was indicated that the case of the taxpayer (an Ecuadorian company that had several foreign companies as shareholders and creditors) was different from the cases already considered by the CNJ, as in that specific case the foreign credit was real by virtue of having provided much of the capital and also because said credit was provided for in a contract signed by that company and the state.

The SRI requested an action for protection to the Constitutional Court against a ruling (see Section III, supra) that was admitted by the Constitutional Court. They instructed that the ruling be made void, and ordered the CNJ to issue a new ruling on the same matter.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Currently, the Ecuadorian system for administration of justice is the object of constant and radical changes. With this in mind, after a substantial number of suits of considerable quantum having been dismissed upon application of the Organic Law for the Remission of Interest, Penalties and Surcharges, we believe that the litigious tax jurisdiction has cut down the number of cases being heard and, therefore, we consider that justice in such matters will be quicker and more expeditious.

COGEP has included substantial changes in matters relating to prosecution (including litigious tax jurisdiction), and has implemented basic constitutional principles of procedural law such as procedural expeditiousness, immediacy and economy. As already mentioned, COGEP seeks to transform the old judicial system, which is basically written, into one where the oral procedure is highlighted.

It is evident that those changes will prevent delays in litigious proceedings involving tax matters, which were inherent to the old model. It is, therefore, expected that the judges will be able to efficiently perform their functions, mainly by guaranteeing the right to an effective judicial protection to all taxpayers.

FINLAND

I INTRODUCTION

The courts in Finland are divided into general courts dealing with criminal cases, civil cases and petitionary matters, and administrative courts adjudicating administrative acts such as tax decisions issued by the Finnish Tax Administration (FTA). Further, tax litigation in Finland differs from regular administrative appeal proceedings, as the focus in tax litigation is on the rectification of a decision issued by the FTA. In most cases, the taxpayer is primarily required to file a claim for adjustment to a special administrative body, namely the Board of Adjustment (Board), before entering into court proceedings. Only if such a claim for adjustment is dismissed or rejected by the Board can the decision be appealed further to administrative court.

Even though oral hearings may be requested and applied, litigation in tax matters is mainly carried out through written proceedings, which may, in some cases, have an impact on the aspects de facto taken into account by the courts and other appellate bodies. Furthermore, the resources of the courts and other authorities engaged in appellate proceedings are often limited, which can lead to longer processing times and prolonged uncertainty. In general, tax litigation proceedings may take several years, which can lead to excessive costs and practical complications for taxpayers.

Tax assessment decisions may in general terms be negotiated with the FTA. For example, taxpayers can enter preliminary negotiations with the Large Taxpayers' Office, which is part of the Corporate Taxation Unit within the FTA. Corporate taxpayers may discuss a variety of tax-related topics with the authority (e.g., the taxation of certain transactions). The guidelines and instructions provided by the Large Taxpayers' Office during these negotiations are only binding, however, if specific requirements set out in procedural tax legislation are met. In practice, whenever the issues negotiated with the FTA are controversial, they end up being resolved in formal tax litigation proceedings. Therefore, a great majority of the complex tax disputes are resolved through extensive tax litigation.

It should be noted that the Finnish legislation governing the appeal proceedings in tax matters will experience some significant changes as of 1 January 2017, which not only extend the above-mentioned mandatory adjustment procedure to all tax types, but also harmonise the time limits and appeal periods in various taxation proceedings.

New legislation will provide longer time limits for self-correction by the FTA, which may cause additional dissatisfaction on the taxpayers' side in the future. In addition, one of the essential elements of the upcoming legal amendments include the incorporation of VAT and transfer tax matters into the mandatory adjustment procedure, that is, when the legal amendments come into force, the primary appeal authority will always be the Board regardless of the type of tax against which the taxpayer is appealing.

The amended provisions will be applied to the taxation of tax year 2017 for the first time, and current provisions will continue to apply to the taxation concerning previous tax years up to and including tax year 2016. Appeal proceedings form an exception, however, as the new provisions will apply to appeals that relate to first-stage tax decisions issued by the FTA after 1 January 2017, even if the decision concerns previous tax years.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

The most common way to initiate a tax dispute is to file a claim for adjustment against a tax assessment decision issued by the FTA. Claims for adjustment are primarily investigated by the Board. Currently, this procedure is applicable in matters relating to, inter alia, income taxation, heritage and gift taxation, and taxation on real estate.

In VAT matters, on the other hand, the appeal is filed directly to an administrative court. The FTA processes all appeals as rectification matters at the first stage. In the event the FTA accepts the claim, the appeal to the administrative court is considered annulled. If, on the other hand, the FTA rejects the claim entirely or partly, the matter is further processed as an appeal matter in the administrative court.

Furthermore, in petition proceedings, a decision by the FTA is always appealed directly to an administrative court. Petition proceedings are applicable in matters relating to, inter alia, exemption order decisions regarding tax losses and tax relief decisions regarding non-profit corporations. It is important to note that as of 1 January 2017, the appellate body will be the Board in all tax matters and with regard to all tax types.

Taxpayers may also, on their own initiative, amend or correct tax returns that have already been filed with the FTA even after the deadline for filing a tax return as long as the final tax assessment for the taxable year has not been made.

The current general statute of limitations governing a taxpayer's right to appeal in tax matters is currently five years from the beginning of the calendar year following the tax assessment. For example, the date of completion of tax assessment for tax year 2016 is 31 October 2017. The period of appeal for tax year 2016 will expire on 31 December 2022. This is the last day of the appeal period, and the last day for any appeal. As from 1 January 2017, the general period of appeal will be three years. The former time limit of five years will still be primarily applied to tax decisions and appeal proceedings concerning tax years up to and including 2016 with the exception of appeal proceedings regarding first-stage tax decisions issued on 1 January 2017 or thereafter based on, for example, tax audits concerning previous tax years.

In cases where the tax recipients (the Tax Recipients' Legal Service Unit) appeal a tax assessment of any given taxpayer, the statute of limitations is currently one year. Furthermore, it is possible that the FTA will seek to reassess a taxpayer's taxation on its own initiative (reassessment). The time limit for this right depends on the blameworthiness addressed upon a taxpayer, and is calculated similarly to the statute of limitations rules applicable to taxpayers. The maximum time limit of five years is applicable in cases where the taxpayer has failed to properly file a tax return, or if the tax return or other document filed with the FTA has been false, incomplete or misleading.

The maximum time limit also applies when the FTA has noticed an error to the taxpayer's detriment and seeks to carry out a reassessment to the benefit of the taxpayer. The time limit is two years in cases where there has been a calculation or typing error by the FTA, or the incorrect taxation has been based on incorrect or incomplete information received from third parties. In other situations, the statute of limitations is one year.

The above-mentioned statute of limitations is applied as a general rule. The statute of limitations may, however, vary depending on the tax matter in question. For instance, in VAT matters a taxpayer must appeal within three years from the end of the financial year in question. Furthermore, a taxpayer may appeal a tax assessment decision or a decision issued by an appellate body within 60 days of receiving notice of the decision, irrespective of whether the statutory limitation is exceeded.

As of 1 January 2017, the statute of limitations periods are, however, largely harmonised. Accordingly, a general time limit of three years will be set for reassessment by the FTA. The three-year limit may be continued for one year, however, for example where the taxation proceedings are considered to have been impeded by the taxpayer or if the matter requires the FTA's cooperation with other officials. In addition, an 'extended time limit' of six years may be applied in matters concerning, for example, transfer pricing or financing arrangements between related companies. In other words, despite efforts to simplify the time limits for reassessment and appeal proceedings, ultimately, the need to consider multiple time limits seems to remain unaltered.

In many cases the taxpayer may seek to obtain certainty with regard to a specific tax question subject to interpretation by applying for an advance ruling from the Central Tax Board or the FTA. The Central Tax Board is an autonomous body within the FTA that specifically issues advance rulings in tax matters. However, unambiguous or less important matters may be examined by the FTA itself. An appeal against an advance ruling by the Central Tax Board is filed directly to the Supreme Administrative Court, whereas an appeal against an advance ruling by the FTA is filed to an administrative court. The time limit for filing the appeal to both instances is 30 days. An advance ruling application may also be rejected, in which case no advance ruling is issued. A decision rejecting an advance ruling application may not be appealed.

A taxpayer has the right to file a complaint to the Chancellor of Justice of the government or to the Parliamentary Ombudsman if the taxpayer considers a civil servant (fiscal agent) to have conducted an unlawful action. The Chancellor and the Ombudsman generally inform the authority of their view on the matter. Additionally, they may recommend that the decision is amended, but they do not have the power to overturn a decision.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

The Board is an independent entity within the FTA. The Board functions in different units, each of which resolve appeals relating to income and property taxation, inheritance taxation or taxation on real estate. As previously mentioned, as of 1 January 2017, the primary appeal authority will always be the Board regardless of the type of tax against which the taxpayer is appealing.

The Board consists of members representing taxpayers' organisations, municipalities and the FTA. Much like in administrative courts, proceedings in the Board are mainly written, and in many cases, the tax dispute is finally resolved by the Board without ever entering court proceedings.

The FTA may resolve an appeal addressed to the Board in the event the matter is so unambiguous that it does not require further examination. The request of a taxpayer may be addressed either orally or in writing. Such a decision issued by the FTA may also be appealed to an administrative court.

As explained above, the decision of the Board (adjustment decision) may be appealed to an administrative court. The appeal period is determined in accordance with the general statute of limitations, and in cases where the general statute of limitations has expired, the appeal period is no less than 60 days from the decision by the Board. Administrative courts consist of independent professional judges. In general, all matters are resolved through written proceedings, even though the courts have the possibility to hold oral hearings. Oral hearings may be initiated either at the request of a party or on the court's own initiative.

Decisions by the administrative court may be appealed further to the Supreme Administrative Court, which is the highest court of appeal in all tax matters in Finland. The period of appeal is 60 days from the decision by the administrative court. Appeals to the Supreme Administrative Court require a leave to appeal. Leave to appeal may be granted on the basis of the case's potential importance as precedent, due to a manifest error in the matter, or based on weighty economic or other reasons. The judges of the Supreme Administrative Court include the President and 20 justices, as well as a few temporary justices. As in any other instance, the proceedings are primarily written, oral hearings being even rarer in the highest court instances. The most significant decisions are published annually in the Court's yearbook. Additionally, some decisions are published as short summaries. Instead of granting a final judgment in the matter, the Supreme Administrative Court may also remit the matter to the administrative courts or the FTA for a new hearing.

In exceptional situations, it is possible to appeal a decision by the Board directly to the Supreme Administrative Court. This possibility is available upon decisions made after the beginning of 2014. The Supreme Administrative Court may grant leave to appeal in such cases if granting the leave to appeal is important to establish a precedent for similar cases in the future, or for the uniformity of legal praxis. In cases where the adjustment proceedings at the Board may be followed by an appeal on the grounds of a precedent, the Tax Recipients' Legal Services Unit should always be reserved the opportunity to give a statement in the matter before the case is referred to the Supreme Administrative Court.

As mentioned above, the Central Tax Board also acts as an autonomous advance ruling forum within the FTA, and makes significant tax-related decisions in Finland. It may issue advance tax rulings in matters that have significant precedent value, many of which are also published. The Central Tax Board consists of members representing the FTA, taxpayers' organisations and tax recipients. Rulings by the Central Tax Board are ordinarily issued within a couple of months from the date of the request. The rulings are considered binding only on those tax questions to which they relate. Therefore, it is important for the taxpayer to consider that the ruling for a previous tax year may not be applicable after the tax year in question.

Advance rulings made by the Central Tax Board are appealed directly to the Supreme Administrative Court, and the appeal period is 30 days from receipt of the Central Tax Board's decision. In these appeals, no leave to appeal is required. It should be noted that matters relating to inheritance and gift taxation as well as transfer tax are excluded from the Central Tax Board's jurisdiction.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

In income tax matters, the FTA may impose a punitive tax increase on the taxpayer if the taxpayer has failed to fulfil his or her obligations. The administrative tax penalties may reach a maximum of 30 per cent of the unreported income, ranging typically between 5 and 10 per cent of the unreported or erroneously reported income. The tax increase may be adjusted in cases where it is deemed to be at a notably high level. Additionally, if the taxpayer's level of negligence is only minor, the tax increase may be reduced or dismissed.

Imposing a percentage-based tax penalty should, in principal, require wilful or grossly negligent conduct by the taxpayer (i.e., tax evasion). However, the scope of application of the tax increase has been significantly increased in Finnish tax practice, and the FTA frequently applies percentage-based tax penalties in tax disputes concerning large corporate taxpayers.

It should also be noted that, from a human rights perspective, a punitive tax increase is considered a criminal penalty in Finland. The European Court of Human Rights has, on numerous occasions, considered punitive tax increases to be comparable to criminal sanctions. This notion naturally affects the discussion relating to the ne bis in idem principle. According to the said principle, the defendant cannot be prosecuted repeatedly on the basis of the same offence. The Finnish Supreme Administrative Court has stated, however, that the ne bis in idem principle only applies to individual taxpayers (natural persons) since only physical individuals can be sanctioned for tax crimes. The principle therefore does not apply to companies.

In VAT and payroll withholding-related disputes, percentage-based penalties are available regardless of wilful or grossly negligent conduct, and in cases of wilful or grossly negligent conduct, the penalties may cover the amount of the tax multiple times over. For example, the tax may be increased by 10 per cent in cases where the taxpayer's tax return or other such document contains a minor deficiency and the taxpayer has not complied with the request to correct said deficiency. Furthermore, in cases where the taxpayer has completely failed to carry out due reporting, fulfilled said reporting obligation substantially late, or where the tax return or other such document is manifestly insufficient, the standard maximum penalty is 20 per cent of the amount of the tax. If the above-mentioned dereliction or erroneous report is considered to have taken place for the purposes of committing tax fraud, the tax may be increased by no less than 50 per cent and no more than three times the amount of the tax.

Certain significant tax penalties may also be payable regardless of whether there are any unpaid taxes claimed by the FTA. For instance, a failure to present due transfer pricing documentation in a given time frame may be sanctioned with a tax penalty amounting to a maximum of €25,000.

In addition to actual tax penalties, penalty interest may be payable on unpaid tax amounts. In income tax matters, the general late payment interest is currently 7 per cent per annum. Furthermore, penalty interest is payable for non-reported taxes in the electronic VAT and employer payroll withholding and reporting system at a rate of 7 per cent.

Criminal sanctions may be imposed on taxpayers in cases relating to severe tax evasion. Tax fraud occurs when an individual or business entity wilfully and intentionally falsifies information on a tax return to limit the amount of tax liability. Tax fraud essentially entails cheating on a tax return in an attempt to avoid paying the entire tax obligation. Aggravated tax fraud, being the most serious form of tax-related crime, is sanctioned with imprisonment for a term of at least four months and a maximum of four years. For non-aggravated tax fraud, the sanctions vary from fines to imprisonment for a maximum of two years. As for minor tax offences, they are generally sanctioned with fines. It should be noted that the monetary threshold for aggravated tax fraud is relatively low in Finland. According to legal praxis, monetary interests of some tens of thousands of euros have been considered sufficient for the tax evasion to qualify as aggravated tax fraud.

The statute of limitations applicable in criminal proceedings can be longer than the five-year limit typically applicable in tax matters. For instance, aggravated tax crime becomes time-barred after 10 years. A taxpayer found guilty of a tax crime may also be ordered to pay damages to the tax recipients in respect of all the years that are not time-barred according to the statute of limitations applicable in criminal proceedings. It should be noted that in criminal matters, taxpayers have no responsibility to provide any evidence of their innocence, but the prosecutor has to fulfil its burden of proof.

i Recovering overpaid tax

The overpaid income tax is generally refunded to a taxpayer as a tax refund if the taxpayer's tax withholdings or tax prepayments exceed the final amount of tax payable for the tax year in question. The refund is made approximately one year after the end of the relevant tax year or financial period. A refund of overpaid taxes may be possible even before the regular tax refund payment date upon a specific application.

A separate refund application should expressly be filed to the FTA when a non-resident taxpayer has been charged withholding taxes in Finland that exceed the maximum level allowed under an applicable tax treaty and EU principles. A similar refund process also exists in matters relating to transfer taxes.

Additionally, overpaid VAT may be refunded automatically to the taxpayer from the electronic VAT and employer payroll withholding and reporting system based on the periodic tax return filed by the taxpayer. The FTA issues a separate decision on the refund application only if it rejects the periodic tax return partially or entirely. This decision is subject to a separate appeal.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

In Finland, the vast majority of administrative appeals in tax matters relate to the interpretation of the technical tax rules applicable in the case at hand. A recent phenomenon in tax disputes relates to whether a transaction can be re-characterised based on a specific transfer pricing rule in Finnish tax legislation. The approach adopted by the FTA deviates from the approach adopted by taxpayers in general. The matter is further discussed below.

Additionally, there are a number of examples from case law that relate to, for example, the protection of the taxpayer's legitimate expectations in cases where the taxpayer has relied on an established tax practice or advice issued by the FTA. The protection of legitimate expectations secures the realisation of the binding foundations of the Finnish tax system and, as an established norm, must be taken into consideration by the FTA in its decision-making. A claim based on the protection of legitimate expectations may succeed in the event that a decision by the FTA conflicts with its earlier advice or an established practice.

Further, the rules on taxpayers' obligation to provide information to the FTA are currently being broadly discussed, and there are significant pending disputes addressing that issue.

iii Claimants

Parties entitled to bringing tax claims are the taxpayer and anyone whose taxation is directly affected by the assessment decision in question. In practice, this requires that there is an actual tax impact in the specific case at hand. For example, the spouse of an individual taxpayer may have a right to appeal on this basis, and similar cases may arise in relation to partnership and bankruptcy estates. In these cases, a question of consequential change may be applicable. In the event that a tax decision affects the taxation of another taxpayer, the FTA may reassess the latter's taxation accordingly.

In VAT matters, a person subject to VAT may file an appeal in the tax process in relation to a VAT matter reported by him or her. Specific conditions may apply upon a seller and a buyer in sales transactions, and should be considered on a case-by-case basis and accounted for in entering transfer agreements. The applicability of a specific set-off possibility as per the Finnish Value Added Tax Act should be considered in cases where the VAT has been executed erroneously between the parties of a sales transaction.

In general, the tax recipients (the state, local municipalities, the church, etc.) are represented by the Tax Recipients' Legal Services Unit, an autonomous entity within the FTA. The Unit is not bound by the decisions and guidelines of the FTA, and has a right to appeal tax assessment decisions as well as act on behalf of the tax recipients in all tax appeal matters. The Unit is divided into three groups: personal taxation and preliminary taxation, corporate taxation and VAT matters.

It should be noted that the Tax Recipients' Legal Services Unit has the right to appeal tax decisions to the benefit of the taxpayer as well. Respectively, taxpayers may request the reassessment of a tax decision on their own initiative on the basis of not having paid the sufficient amount of taxes.

VI COSTS

Taxpayers have the right to claim compensation for their tax litigation costs. It should be noted, however, that the right only applies to court proceedings; administrative proceedings leading up to the court proceedings, including proceedings in the Board, are excluded from this rule. In addition, a successful claim for compensation usually requires that the taxpayer succeeds in his or her principal claim, the matter has significant value relating to the interpretation of law, or that granting such compensation can be based on another special ground. Tax litigation costs are therefore rarely compensated in practice even in cases where the final decision is in favour of the taxpayer.

This situation stems directly from administrative procedural legislation according to which a party should be held liable for the other party's legal costs only if, in view of the resolution of the matter, it would be unreasonable to make the latter bear his or her own costs. The interpretation of this standard has been strict, and any possibility to recover legal costs has typically required an obvious error by the FTA. Even in these cases, the compensated costs are often limited to a nominal amount.

Respectively, the chances of the FTA recovering any costs from a taxpayer are extremely slim. Under current procedural rules, a private party should not be held liable for the costs of a public authority unless the private party has made a manifestly unfounded claim. The starting point is understandable and pertains directly to the fact that the tax authority is always in a stronger position in such proceedings.

These rules have, however, caused administrative litigation, and especially tax disputes, to significantly differ from civil litigation, and the applied principle of full compensation.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Currently, means of alternative dispute resolution, such as arbitration or mediation, are not utilised in tax disputes in Finland. However, the European Commission's proposal for a Council Directive on Double Taxation Dispute Resolution Mechanisms in the EU has received positive feedback as an instrument that would increase the range of taxpayers' effective remedies in international tax disputes, which seems to echo the sentiment and aim of the OECD and G20 base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS) project to improve dispute resolution mechanisms and minimise risks of uncertainty and unintended double taxation.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Finnish tax legislation includes a general anti-avoidance rule for the purpose of preventing tax avoidance. According to the rule, the legal form of a situation or a measure that does not correspond to the true nature or purpose of the matter shall be taxed as if the correct form had been used. To avoid the application of the anti-avoidance rule, the arrangement in question must have legitimate business-related justifications instead of mere tax-related reasons (i.e., business reasons). When applying the anti-avoidance rule, the legal form of an action may be disregarded for tax purposes, in which case the amount of tax will be assessed as if the transaction had been carried out using the correct form.

The FTA and the courts apply the principle of substance over form as stated in the tax legislation. If the FTA concludes that there is no business reason or no adequate business reason underlying a transaction between related companies, or that a transaction has been given a legal form that does not correspond to its true nature, it may consider the transaction to be null and void for tax purposes and assess the amount of tax as if the real form had been used. Disregarding form for tax purposes does not affect the validity of the transaction as such, but may still be regarded as valid under company law and for other legal purposes.

If it is evident that a company has paid its shareholder more than a reasonable amount as salary, housing benefit, entertainment or insurance, or if the company pays its shareholder interest, lease payments, commission or other such benefits and the amount exceeds what the company would ordinarily pay to third parties, the amount of tax may be assessed based on the amount that the tax authority deems to be in excess of the reasonable amount. This type of conduct is referred to as hidden profit distribution.

If the tax authorities conclude that the arm's-length principle has not been observed in transactions between related companies, the taxation of these companies may be corrected and reassessed to reflect the arm's-length conditions (transfer pricing). This reassessment does not require any evidence of tax-avoidance. Finnish subsidiaries and branches of non-resident companies are treated similarly to resident companies.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

Finland has an extensive network of double taxation treaties in the areas of income and capital taxes. The treaties are based on the OECD Model Convention. Finland's tax treaties are based either on the resident state principle or the source state principle, which is in line with Finnish domestic tax legislation.

Finnish domestic law does not include any special rules concerning the interpretation of tax treaties, but the interpretation is based on the Vienna Convention, the OECD Model Convention as well as basic domestic principles governing the interpretation of Finnish tax legislation. The Supreme Administrative Court acts as the final forum to interpret tax treaties in Finland.

It should be noted that the Supreme Administrative Court has effectively applied the OECD Model Convention in its rulings, due to which the Convention should be considered a source of interpretation for the Court. The role of the OECD Transfer Pricing Guidelines (OECD Guidelines) and its commentaries is more unclear, however, and the question of the relevance of these guidelines as a source of interpretation in Finnish taxation proceedings remains ambiguous. For instance, the FTA has drawn rather far-reaching conclusions in transfer pricing cases from relatively vague statements in the OECD Guidelines, whereas the Supreme Administrative Court has in a recent 2014 ruling stated that the OECD Guidelines cannot extend the scope of national legislation to the detriment of the taxpayer. This statement is currently applied as the general rule in transfer pricing matters.

There have been a number of significant decisions by the European Court of Justice regarding tax matters in Finland, which ultimately serves as proof of the influence that EU principles have on Finnish tax regimes.

It can be noted, however, that the general atmosphere regarding the effect of the EU principles or decisions by the European Court of Justice is somewhat reluctant. For instance, in a 2002 ruling, the Supreme Administrative Court rejected an appeal regarding a tax assessment where a Belgian subsidiary of a Finnish company had been treated as a controlled foreign corporation for Finnish tax purposes without referring the matter to the European Court of Justice. Based on a later ruling by the European Court of Justice in Cadbury Schweppes,<sup>2</sup> the Supreme Administrative Court finally annulled its decision in 2011.

The European Court of Justice ruled in July 2013 in its decision in P Oy,<sup>3</sup> that the Finnish tax loss carry-forward system, whereby the FTA has its own discretion based on its own guidelines to decide which companies get the permission to use the tax losses forfeited due to an ownership change, was not against the illegal state aid provisions provided by EU law. After the ruling by the European Court of Justice the Supreme Administrative Court has issued two published decisions on the loss carry-forward system in favour of the taxpayer. First, the Supreme Administrative Court has ruled that the Finnish loss carry-forward system is not prevented by the state aid in question. Second, the Supreme Administrative Court held that a loss carry-forward permission could be granted in a case where the tax-related criteria were fulfilled even though the criteria unrelated to the tax regime were not fulfilled. For the time being, the FTA has not issued any new guidelines on whether loss carry-forward permission decisions should be based on tax-related criteria only. Hence, the future developments in this matter remain to be seen.

As a Member State of the EU, Finland has implemented the VAT Directive in the Finnish Value Added Tax Act. In principle, all resident entrepreneurs who are engaged in the commercial supply of goods or services are subject to VAT, and are required to register for VAT purposes. However, suppliers of selected goods and certain services are exempt. The system is based on self-assessment by registered entrepreneurs. Entrepreneurs are required to pay VAT even when their products are used for private purposes or given as free gifts. The general VAT rate is 24 per cent. Reduced rates of 14 and 10 per cent apply to, for example, restaurant services and transport services. There are a large number of exemptions from VAT, such as financial services and the sale of real property. In addition, a VAT threshold system has been incorporated into the Finnish tax system according to which there is no obligation to register for VAT purposes, and no VAT is levied on the taxpayer if the annual turnover of the taxpayer's business activity does not exceed €8,500. When this threshold is exceeded, the taxpayer receives a relief that gradually decreases with the increase in turnover. The full amount of VAT is levied if the annual turnover is €22,500 or more.<sup>4</sup>

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Following the relatively aggressive approaches taken by the FTA in past years in focusing on transfer pricing matters, there has been something of a change towards the assessment of various procedural rules and regulations. The means applied by the FTA in its aim to intensively collect revenues are being increasingly questioned by taxpayers.

Transfer pricing and allocation of income in a group structure continue to be topical in the Finnish tax practice. In addition, various holding structures, including reinvestments in acquisition structures in connection with mergers and acquisitions, are actively scrutinised by the FTA. Further, regarding private equity, traditional carried interest arrangements are very much the focus of the FTA, and should be carefully considered both looking back as well as going forward to assess and prepare for the potential approaches to be taken by the FTA.

<sup>4</sup> As of 1 January 2016, the threshold for the VAT levy was raised to €10,000, and the threshold for the VAT relief was raised to €30,000.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

The Supreme Administrative Court has recently issued two important rulings<sup>5</sup> that relate to structuring and financing arrangements applied in corporate structures with Finnish branches as well as tax planning questions therein. The rulings continue the discussion revolving around transfer pricing and tax planning, as well as the substance-over-form tool applied by the FTA in these matters. Contrary to the approach adopted by the FTA, the Supreme Administrative Court has stated that recognising a transaction should be based on its civil law form, disallowing some of the interpretations made by the FTA. Nevertheless, the most recent cases would suggest it is likely that even more transfer pricing-related tax disputes will arise in the near future.

In the light of future challenges in tax matters, it should be noted that a multilateral instrument implementing the OECD measures and transposing the results from the BEPS project into tax treaties worldwide is contemplated to be signed in June 2017. The factual implementation measures following the contemplated signing will take time, however, and it is considered unlikely that the new multilateral instrument would be applicable before year-end 2018. This causes, however, somewhat unpredictable expectations and insecurity in terms of taxation in Finland.

Further, it should be noted that the scope of application of the specific Finnish interest deduction limitation rules are subject to change due to the EU Anti-Tax Avoidance Directive (2016/1164/EU), which is likely to be applied also with respect to activities such as real estate investments and the related structures currently not within the scope of the application of said rules. Accordingly, as Finland is in the process of implementing the most recent BEPS reforms, which will likely give rise to divergent interpretations in the relatively near future, which can lead to an increasing amount of tax disputes.

5 Rulings SAC 2016:71 and SAC 2016:72 relate to the allocation of shares and interest deductibility by a Finnish branch of a non-resident company. In the latter ruling, the Supreme Administrative Court also took a stand on the arrangement's artificial nature under the anti-avoidance provision.

FRANCE

I INTRODUCTION

The French system for assessing, auditing and challenging taxes has been extremely constant over the past few decades. The major changes essentially reflect progress in technology (use of digital data and equipment in tax audits, tax filings, tax payments and dispute procedures), the growing influence of international instruments of human rights and European Union law, and a tendency of both the tax authorities and taxpayers to be more aggressive than they used to be. Alternative dispute resolution methods have not developed, and a very effective method came to an end in 2010.

The French tax system is largely based upon self-assessment, with taxpayers filing their tax returns, and often assessing their own tax, on the basis of their assessment of the facts and interpretation of the law. In recent years, the filing and reporting obligations of taxpayers have been increased substantially, especially with respect to their cross-border assets and activities. Likewise, the French tax authorities have been granted easier access to widened means of information by the legislator in domestic situations and by international instruments in matters containing a foreign element.

Statutes of limitation had been remarkably constant in the past. They have been successively amended to reduce limitation periods for certain taxpayers' claims, and to extend the periods available to the tax authorities for making reassessments or initiating criminal procedures. Currently, the legislator is endeavouring to double the criminal periods of limitation, and no such limitation effectively applies to money laundering of the proceeds of tax fraud.

Statistics published by the French tax authorities in their annual report show that the overall number of tax reviews by the French tax authorities remains stable. A vast majority consists of unilateral reviews by a tax auditor of documents available to the authorities both for individuals (close to 1 million of them in total) and businesses (close to 300,000 of them in total). Taxpayers must be informed of the outcome of such reviews and may comment before the tax is assessed. More formal audit procedures are more inquisitive, and involve both a discussion with the taxpayer and counsel and access to an internal review. Their numbers are tending to slowly decline: in 2015, 46,266 audits with accounting checks were carried out with businesses, and 3,902 thorough audits of personal situations took place with individuals.

The amounts of reassessments and penalties increased by almost 11 per cent to €22 billion in 2015, largely but not only because of the voluntary disclosure programme for individuals holding assets abroad. Corporation tax reassessments also went up by 27 per cent to €4.8 billion. The total amount of taxes and penalties assessed in serious frauds (defined as triggering 40 per cent penalties or more after a tax audit) also jumped by 46 per cent to €7.8 billion, although this represents the same 31 per cent proportion of tax and penalties assessed in formal tax audit procedures over preceding years.

The amount and proportion of tax and penalties effectively collected over a period remain at approximately 55 per cent of the assessed amounts. This relatively stable proportion slightly increased in 2015 as a result of the voluntary disclosure programme. A 55 per cent proportion tends to confirm that a substantial amount of the taxes and penalties, of approximately €8 billion in total, assessed after a tax audit are effectively reduced as a result of internal reviews by, or negotiations with, the French tax authorities resulting in pre-litigation settlements; and also in pursuance of court decisions upon disputes.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Although there can be many steps, or administrative decisions, before a tax is assessed, taxpayers are generally barred from initiating any action until a tax is assessed. Only few exceptions enable an actual or potential taxpayer to start an action before a tax deed has been issued.

Taxpayers, and certain taxpayers associations, may file petitions for a judicial review of administrative guidelines that may be declared illegal on any point where they give an interpretation of the tax law that differs from the decision of an administrative judge on the relevant point. Such procedures have been used, successfully at times, to shortcut the lengthy administrative and judicial process of a tax controversy. Some of these petitions may be the basis for the administrative court to refer a preliminary question either to the Constitutional Council on certain matters where a legislative provision is challenged against any fundamental human rights enshrined in the French Constitution, or the European Court of Justice (ECJ) where a question of EU law is involved.

The recent challenge to the 3 per cent corporation tax surcharge on distributed amounts provides such an example where petitions were filed by certain taxpayers and AFEP, the French association of large businesses, before the Council of State in 2016. Both petitioners claimed the administrative guidelines were illegal because they commented upon a piece of legislation that was against the principle of equal rights on certain points and contrary to the EU Parent–Subsidiary Directive on other points. The Council of State decided in June 2016 to refer the equal treatment point to the French Constitutional Council, and the Directive points to the ECJ. The Constitutional Council found the law to be discriminatory and unconstitutional in a ruling of 30 September. The law was amended accordingly by the Finance Act of 29 December 2016, which extended the benefit of an exemption for intragroup dividends to domestic, European and most third-country corporate relationships.

The EU case is pending before the ECJ, which decided that there would be no hearing or advocate general's opinion, presumably because the French case is similar on both points to an earlier Belgian case on the 'fairness tax'.

Other parallel procedures are less radical, and have both narrower scope and lower chances of success.

Petitions for judicial review could also be introduced with respect to individual decisions, such as an unsatisfactory ruling, notified to a taxpayer. Until recently, the French tax courts were excessively restrictive upon the admission of such petitions on the ground that, except in very special circumstances, the decision was not separable from the taxation procedure. A limited progress on the point should come from a December 2016 Council of State decision in the Export Press case.

Prior to a tax audit, the tax authorities may apply to a civil judge for a warrant to search premises and attach documents that could be used as evidence that a business is carried out in France and should be taxable in France. Many undisclosed permanent establishments of foreign entities were the purpose of such warrants. As a result of an European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) ruling in Ravon, French law was amended to the effect of allowing the potential taxpayer and the tenant of the searched premises to immediately appeal from the warrant to the president of the court of appeals and challenge the basis for the authorities' suspicions. They may also challenge the validity of the search on grounds of breach of confidentiality. Such appeals and challenges are commonly introduced shortly after the searches have been made and before the tax assessments are established. However, such appeals are seldom successful.

More commonly, tax disputes commence when a tax is assessed or paid and the taxpayer either challenges the administrative reassessment or claims for a tax refund.

i Tax claim

Under French tax procedure, the first step for challenging a tax assessment or for claiming a tax refund is a petition to the head of the relevant tax department whatever tax is involved and even where the tax was assessed according to the taxpayer's return. More than three million are filed each year, mainly with respect to income taxes assessed by the authorities on individuals or local taxes. Businesses file approximately 50,000 such petitions on corporation tax and a few thousand more on VAT.

The petition must be filed, before any referral to any court, to the head of the tax office that has jurisdiction over the relevant tax. It must:

- a* specify the tax that is being challenged;
- b* provide a summary of the facts, pleas and arguments;
- c* be signed by the taxpayer or an authorised agent; and
- d* be accompanied by a copy of the Treasury claim concerned (assessment notice, collection notice or withholding document, in the case of withholding taxes).

Generally, the claim must be filed by 31 December of the second year following that of the assessment, collection notice or payment. An extension applies after a tax audit.

Submitting a claim does not exempt the taxpayer from the obligation to pay the taxes and penalties imposed. However, the taxpayer may request that payment be suspended. Suspension of payment is granted in exchange for the provision of guarantees (e.g., mortgage or pledge up to the amount of the principal taxes; penalties need not to be secured). The suspension remains until a lower court decision on the dispute is issued.

If the lower court rules in favour of the tax authorities, the suspended tax and penalties become payable, and the taxpayer would be liable to pay a 5 or 10 per cent surcharge plus interest on the arrears at a rate of 0.4 per cent per month. Conversely, if the court finds for the taxpayer who has already paid the taxes claimed, the taxpayer is entitled to interest on arrears of 0.4 per cent per month or 4.8 per cent per annum. Considering the prevailing market rates, it is financially advantageous for taxpayers to pay and not to apply for suspension.

The authorities must reply to a claim within six months. Failing a reply within this time, the authorities are deemed to have implicitly rejected it.

If the claim is totally or partially rejected, in writing or implicitly, the taxpayer is entitled to bring an action before the administrative or civil courts, depending on the case.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

Where the taxpayer is not satisfied by a decision, the dispute may be brought before the courts. There are no special tax courts in France, and tax cases are heard by the common administrative, civil or criminal courts, depending upon the tax that is challenged or the penalty applied.

i Types of court

Administrative courts have jurisdiction over income tax, corporation tax, VAT and local taxes, and over the related tax penalties. Each year, approximately 18,000 tax cases are introduced in the lower administrative courts. In 2015, 3915 appeals were recorded with administrative courts of appeals, and 354 further appeals were lodged with the Council of State, the supreme administrative court. Overall, the administrative courts decided partly or totally in favour of the taxpayers in approximately 12.4 per cent of the cases (13.6 per cent on VAT matters, and 14.8 per cent on income and corporation tax matters) in 2015.

Civil courts have jurisdiction over stamp duties, gift and inheritance taxes, annual wealth taxes and some excise duties, together with the related tax penalties. In 2015, 751 cases were filed with the lower civil courts, 256 with the courts of appeals and 53 with the Court of Cassation, the supreme court of the judiciary. Civil courts decided in favour of the taxpayers in approximately 33 per cent of the cases.

Criminal prosecutions may be initiated at the request of the tax authorities on any matter of tax fraud, which is widely defined, whatever the tax involved. Approximately 1,000 such procedures are held each year. The criminal procedure for money laundering of the proceeds of tax fraud or for tax swindles (in VAT and other tax credit cases) may be initiated by the public prosecutor without request from the tax authorities. Criminal sanctions such as fines and imprisonment may be applied on top of the tax penalties.

Each type of court comprises three levels: the first level consists of the administrative courts and the courts of first instance; the second level consists of the courts of appeal and the administrative appeal courts; and the highest level consists of the Court of Cassation and the Council of State, which generally rule only on points of law and not fact.

Each court may, and in certain situations must, refer certain questions either to the Constitutional Council or the ECJ. The Constitutional Council has exclusive jurisdiction to decide upon the conformity of French legislative provisions with the human rights protected by the Constitution, including the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen of 1789. Several dozens of tax provisions have been reviewed accordingly upon the request of taxpayers. Referrals to the ECJ are commonly ordered by the Council of State or the Court of Cassation, including for tax matters. Lower courts are much more restrictive or reluctant to do so, and some, like the administrative courts of Paris, have never referred a tax case to the ECJ.

ii Proceedings

Before French courts, and particularly in relation to tax matters, the procedure is conducted primarily in writing, and results in an exchange of briefs and pieces of evidence between the taxpayer and the authorities.

The taxpayer must petition the court within a prescribed time following the formal rejection of its claim by the tax director. The time limit is generally two months. The petition must be reasoned and attach the tax deed, plus any piece of evidence the taxpayer would rely on, even where previously submitted to the tax authorities, since these are not expected to forward any of these to the court.

The assistance of a registered attorney is not legally required in the first instance. Before the appellate courts, representation by a registered lawyer is mandatory. Before the Council of State and Court of Cassation, the taxpayer must be represented by one of the 60 barristers admitted to represent clients before these supreme courts. This restriction does not apply before the Constitutional Council or the ECJ, where any registered lawyer may assist the parties, and the government is generally represented by its own agents.

No more than two briefs are commonly exchanged by each party, but this is not a hard rule. Following these exchanges, the court may, and often does, pronounce the closure of the period for submissions (also named ‘instruction’) and schedules a date for the hearing.

Administrative and civil courts conduct hearings differently and have different views of their own missions. Civil courts recognise taxpayers’ right to a fair trial before them, in line with Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights.<sup>2</sup> Administrative courts have taken the opposite view on the grounds that Article 6 applies only to civil obligations and criminal charges, and would not apply to tax matters except where the tax penalties are equivalent to a criminal sanction. This position was not altered after the European Charter of Fundamental Rights, which does not distinguish between these positions, obtained treaty force in December 2009.

In practical terms, these differing views entail certain consequences, the most important of which are that the administrative courts consider that it is part of their mission to challenge the petition of the taxpayer, including on points of law and points of fact that are not discussed by the French tax authorities; and that in doing so, they are not raising a plea of their own motion, and accordingly can forgo from informing the parties (i.e., the taxpayer) and inviting them to submit their comments.<sup>3</sup>

Before both types of courts, a reporting judge summarises the case at a hearing. Witnesses and experts are not heard. Both parties are entitled to present oral arguments and plead their case (however briefly).

Before the administrative courts, a public reporter, who is a member of the court that does not participate in the decision-making, delivers an opinion that is based upon a draft judgment, and may raise issues that were not addressed by the parties. At this point, the parties are informed of such issues. They may then make very brief observations and, where appropriate, file a 'post-hearing brief' to clarify any points that have been raised, or overlooked, by the public reporter. The court must consider this post-hearing brief and decide whether it reopens the case before reaching a decision.

iii Effectiveness of the system

The costs of such procedures are fairly limited and are not an obstacle for taxpayers to put their case. However, the length of the proceedings is a weakness that may dissuade taxpayers from initiating them. One reason is that the tax authorities often take a long time to reply to briefs filed by taxpayers, and taxpayers do not really have any way to compel the administration to issue a response.

It is not uncommon for the administrative courts of first instance to take up to three years to rule on a matter brought before them. Regarding appeals, it can take up to 10 years to resolve a tax dispute, which penalises the taxpayer more than the tax administration.

A taxpayer who has been unsuccessful before the national courts may apply to the ECHR where fundamental rights are at stake. However, this is extremely rare, even though, in certain cases, the judgments delivered by the ECHR have had a real impact on French tax procedures.<sup>4</sup>

i Tax penalties

Default interest

Tax increases set by the tax offices are systematically increased through default interest of 0.4 per cent each month (4.8 per cent per annum). This default interest is not considered a penalty as such, but rather as fair compensation for the damage incurred by the Treasury owing to late payment of taxes by the taxpayer.

Since the default interest is not considered a penalty, it is applied automatically and does not have to be justified.

In practice, and for the same reason, it has become very difficult to obtain a total or partial exemption from default interest even when taxpayers act in good faith.

Surcharges

Assessments for back taxes are often accompanied by surcharges, the rate of which varies depending on the circumstances of the case and on whether the taxpayer is deemed to have acted in good faith.

A 10 per cent surcharge applies in cases of delay by the taxpayer in satisfying his or her declaratory obligations, plus default interest. A 40 per cent surcharge applies to unpaid taxes where the authorities consider that the taxpayer's failure to pay was deliberate. This surcharge is raised to 80 per cent in the event of fraud and 'abuse of the law'. The deliberate nature of offences (mens rea) must be demonstrated by the tax authorities, who apply the above penalties in approximately 30 per cent of reassessments following full audits, and who bear the onus of proof in the case of a challenge before the tax courts. Tax penalties may be, and often are, mitigated by the tax authorities to reach out-of-court settlements.

ii Criminal penalties

On top of tax surcharges, criminal penalties may apply in a wide range of situations.

Legal and natural persons may be found guilty of tax evasion where they fraudulently evaded or tried to fraudulently evade the assessment or collection of tax.

Criminal penalties for 'ordinary' tax evasion include a fine of €500,000 and a prison sentence of up to five years. The fine is increased to €750,000 if the evasion was carried out or facilitated by means of purchases or sales without invoices, or where invoices do not relate to real transactions.

'Aggravated' tax evasion may be subject to a €2 million fine or seven years' imprisonment in situations where it was carried out or facilitated by using foreign bank accounts or entities such as trusts located in third countries, false identities or any false documents, fictional or artificial acts or entities, or abusive tax residence in another state. The same penalties would be applicable in cases of tax fraud carried out in organised groups. Any accessory to such offences may be charged with the same penalties.

The Constitutional Court found the French system to be compatible with the 'non bis in idem' principle on the basis that criminal prosecutions are dedicated to the most serious offences, which may be selected by the tax authorities upon a favourable opinion from the Tax Offence Commission. As previously mentioned, the tax authorities file around 1,000 tax evasion complaints each year.

The statute of limitations applicable to the offence of tax evasion has been extended from three to six years by the Tax Fraud Act, which also introduced a 'repentance provision' according to which the offender may benefit from a reduction of a prison term on the condition that he or she helps the tax authorities to identify his or her accomplices.

i Recovering overpaid tax

Taxpayers who believe they have paid too much tax and wish to claim it back must follow a procedure similar to that for challenging a tax reassessment. The procedure applies to a taxpayer residing abroad who has incurred French withholding tax at the statutory rate, and who wishes to invoke a bilateral tax treaty to benefit from a reduced rate of withholding tax and to claim back the excess tax paid. Both the non-resident taxpayer and the paying agent may lodge a claim with the relevant office (in this example, the tax office for non-residents) within the legal time limit. If the claim is implicitly or explicitly rejected, the taxpayer or the withholding agent may bring the case to the competent courts.

In the particular case where it is claimed the tax in question breaches EU law, taxpayers are entitled to demand an exemption from or a reduction of the taxes and the repayment of any excess based on the fact that the texts applied are contrary to EU law; and compensation for the damage incurred. The amount of tax repayment, plus interest, is assessed each year in the Finance Bill. Currently it stands at approximately €21 billion.<sup>5</sup>

The remedy follows the tax claim procedure described above, particularly as regards the time in which to file an action.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Taxpayers and certain other persons may ask an administrative judge to review certain administrative decisions that they deem illegal within the framework of an abuse of power contest.

When examining an abuse of power contest against an administrative act upon which a tax is based, the administrative judge who finds the act to be illegal may declare it null, but may not decide upon the corresponding tax charges.

iii Claimants

Tax claims may be brought only by the taxpayer, or the withholding agent in the case of withholding taxes. Group actions are not allowed in tax disputes.

VI COSTS

Costs are limited to counsel and other fees, as the French administration of justice is free of charge.

Within the framework of court action, the losing party may be ordered to pay the successful party a sum intended to cover 'irrecoverable' costs.

A taxpayer whose action was unsuccessful may be ordered to compensate the Treasury for its legal costs.

Regardless of which party brings the action, incurred costs are almost never refunded in full. Compensation seldom exceeds a few thousand euros.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Strictly speaking, in France there are no alternatives to the dispute resolution procedures described in this chapter.

However, at any time during the procedure, and even when the dispute is before the courts, the taxpayer can reach a settlement with the tax authorities to end the dispute.

In the context of such settlements, the parties generally agree on a tax base. Quite often, the authorities grant a partial or total exemption from penalties. No settlement may be found when the Revenue contemplates filing a criminal complaint or when the taxpayer has tried to delay the procedure in bad faith.

In this respect, it was recently observed that the tax authorities tended to 'inflate' the amount of the penalties in the adjustment notices sent to taxpayers to retain some room for negotiation in the event of a settlement.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

French law contains both general anti-avoidance rules, namely ‘abus de droit’ (or abuse of the law) and ‘act of mismanagement’ theories, and specific anti-avoidance rules.

Special administrative procedural rules apply to ‘abus de droit’. Article L64 of the tax procedure code (LPF) provides that the tax authorities are entitled to reject as inapplicable to them acts that constitute fraud, and to restore the true character thereof where those acts either are shams that are fictitious (‘fictitiousness’ theory) or that comply with the letter of the law but are contrary to the purpose of its authors and inspired by no other reason than to elude or reduce the tax burden (‘fraudulent evasion’ theory). A special 80 per cent surcharge applies to abuse of law where the taxpayer was the principal instigator or principal beneficiary of such a scheme. A surcharge of 40 per cent will be applied otherwise.

Where the tax authorities consider that there is an abuse of law, the taxpayer may refer the matter to the Abuse of Law Committee and present its observations in a written statement. It is then summoned to a Committee session to present its oral observations and answer the questions of Committee members. Prior to the meeting, and in the absence of the taxpayer or its counsel, the Committee members hear a reporter, generally appointed from the French tax authorities.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

France has one of the largest networks of international tax treaties. Currently, it has concluded 126 treaties for the avoidance of double taxation.<sup>6</sup>

Most of these treaties conform to the OECD or UN models, and when interpreting them the courts pay close attention to the OECD Comments. Recent controversial decisions have held that tax-exempt parties are not regarded as residents of the other contracting state and must be denied treaty benefits. This applies to both offshore activities<sup>7</sup> and pension funds.<sup>8</sup>

France recently concluded 25 treaties in conformity with Article 26 of the OECD Model Convention, the purpose of which is limited to the exchange of information.

On the other hand, certain foreign states or territories have not concluded any agreement with France for the exchange of fiscal information. Under French domestic law, they are regarded as ‘non-cooperative’ and are the subject of specific tax provisions (e.g., an increase in the withholding tax on income paid to companies that are established in such states). The short list of these states and territories is updated annually.<sup>9</sup> Pursuant to Constitutional Council decisions, the presumption of tax avoidance attached to transactions with such territories may be rebutted.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

To defend their rights, taxpayers can of course rely on the law, as voted by Parliament, as well as regulatory measures taken by the government that are codified in the General Tax Code and the LPF. Moreover, the administration's own doctrine, consisting of its guidelines, instructions, ministerial replies to questions from members of Parliament or the administrative decisions on questions put to it by taxpayers (rulings), may be invoked by taxpayers in the same situation, and are binding both for the tax authorities and the tax courts.<sup>10</sup>

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

French authorities regularly emphasise the need to combat fraud and tax avoidance, especially in cross-border contexts.

Proposals regularly submitted to Parliament aim at reinforcing the means available to the authorities and increase the obligations placed on taxpayers, as well as impose tougher penalties for breaches. More often than not, these specific measures need to be, and effectively are, checked by the fundamental rights protected by the Constitution and international instruments.

GERMANY

I INTRODUCTION

Germany has a long-standing and well-established system and practice of disputes and litigation in tax matters. Where a taxpayer deems a tax claim asserted against him or her by the tax authorities to be unlawful, he or she is constitutionally entitled (under Article 19, Paragraph 4 of the German Constitution) to have the governmental action in question reviewed by the courts. It is common practice for German taxpayers to exercise that right. As a rule, such disputes are handled in a solution-oriented and constructive manner by all persons and authorities involved. Tax officials do not take it personally if a tax claim asserted by them is submitted to the courts for review. Only very rarely does such a dispute escalate into a heated confrontation.

Importantly, when faced with a potentially unlawful tax assessment notice, a taxpayer is not obliged to immediately turn to the courts for assistance. Rather, the taxpayer is entitled (and usually legally required) to first challenge the assessment before the authority that issued the notice. This out-of-court remedy is referred to as an administrative appeal. The administrative appeal procedure, which precedes any actual litigation, has a dual function: to relieve the courts and to afford the tax authorities a chance to double-check their own tax assessment notices.

It is very common for taxpayers to exercise their right to challenge a tax assessment notice or other action of a tax authority. According to statistics published by the German Ministry of Finance, between 3.45 million and 5.24 million administrative appeals were lodged annually over the past few years (from 2009 to 2015). These administrative appeals were often successful, thus eliminating the need for court proceedings. In more than two-thirds of cases, the administrative appeal prompted the tax authorities to amend the action challenged (e.g., the tax assessment notice) as requested. Generally speaking, administrative appeal proceedings take three to 12 months.

If the taxpayer's administrative appeal is not fully granted, the tax authority needs to issue a formal decision of refusal (the administrative-appeal decision). The taxpayer may then submit this decision to a tax court for review. Organisationally, the tax courts are entirely separate from and independent of the tax authorities; they are also fully independent and not in any way subject to instructions when adjudicating on the lawfulness of measures taken by the tax authorities. Germany has a total of 18 lower (first-instance) tax courts. Over the past few years (2009 to 2014), a total of about 42,000 new legal actions were filed annually with these courts. In 2006 and 2014, 48,606 and only 35,914 legal actions were filed respectively, thus reducing the number of new actions by 26 per cent.

While tax court proceedings take two years on average, this varies significantly depending on the workload of the relevant court division, and also on the question of to what extent the court first needs to establish the facts of the case before it. As one might expect, if the facts of a case prove difficult to establish, this will delay proceedings.

As a rule, the tax courts adjudicate by way of a judgment that upholds, reverses or amends the administrative appeal decision rendered by the tax authority. Given the amount of work involved in drafting a judgment, judges are keen to terminate proceedings in a way that eliminates the need for a formal judgment. If, upon closer examination, the court considers a case to be clear-cut, the parties are told about the decision the court is contemplating. Frequently, the court suggests that the tax authority amend the administrative action challenged (e.g., the tax assessment notice) in favour of the taxpayer to prevent a judgment against the tax authority. In other cases, the court might advise the taxpayer to withdraw his or her action. About two-thirds of all proceedings are terminated in one of the above ways, without any judgment being passed.

Of those cases in which a judgment has been passed, only about 20 per cent are (in whole or in part) in favour of the taxpayer. The latest statistics show that this trend decreased to 19 per cent in 2015. One important reason why taxpayers have such a low rate of success before the tax courts would seem to be the fact that there is no legal requirement to be professionally represented before the tax courts, unlike in proceedings before the German Federal Tax Court. As a result, many taxpayers take legal action without the involvement of an experienced German qualified lawyer or German qualified tax consultant.

If the losing party deems a judgment rendered by a court of first instance to be incorrect, that party may lodge an appeal with Germany's Federal Tax Court in Munich. As a rule, however, this option is subject to the lower tax court having granted leave to appeal ('revision': a judicial appeal restricted in scope to questions of law). Revision proceedings before the Federal Tax Court take an average of 20 months. More than 41 per cent of these cases are decided in favour of the taxpayer.

Proceedings before both the lower tax courts and the Federal Tax Court are subject to court fees. The amount of these fees depends on the value of the matter in dispute. By way of example, a legal action involving a value of €500,000 triggers fees of €14,144 for proceedings before the tax courts and €17,680 for revision proceedings before the Federal Tax Court. However, these fees are to be borne by the taxpayer only if and to the extent that he or she loses; a taxpayer that wins does not have to bear any court fees. Administrative appeal proceedings before the tax authority never trigger any fees. By contrast, the costs for professional advisers in tax matters (lawyers or tax consultants) are, in principle, to be borne by the taxpayer. However, if and to the extent that the taxpayer wins in court (i.e., the action before the lower tax court or the revision proceedings before the Federal Tax Court), the tax authority has to bear such advisers' costs, albeit capped at the relevant statutory amount of advisers' fees.

i Subject matter of the dispute

Usually, disputes between a taxpayer and the tax authorities are about the lawfulness of a tax assessment notice. In certain constellations, however, a tax assessment notice is preceded by preparatory administrative decisions that constitute a binding basis for the subsequent tax assessment notice. More specifically, from a German tax perspective (under what is known as the transparency principle), partnerships are not themselves subject to income tax or corporate income tax but rather – and solely – their partners are, whether they are natural persons or corporate bodies. The profits attributable to the individual partners are determined by the tax authority that is competent for the partnership and are included in a formal assessment (or declaratory notice of assessment) that, in turn, is binding for the purposes of the personal tax assessment notices of the individual partners. If a partner regards the declaratory notice of assessment as unlawful, he or she may not challenge the (subsequent) personal tax assessment notice but must contest the underlying declaratory notice of assessment. Statute provides for such declaratory notices of assessment in numerous constellations. One such group are cross-border scenarios: for example, those involving the German controlled foreign company rules, also referred to as add-back taxation. In the context of local taxes – for example trade tax – similar preparatory assessment notices are provided for (e.g., assessment notices fixing the tax base for the relevant type of tax). Any unlawful declaratory notice of assessment must be challenged before the issuing authority (and normally within one month). It is imperative not to wait until the subsequent tax assessment notice, which is based on the declaratory notice of assessment, has been issued.

ii Tax dispute resulting from a tax audit

The German tax authorities normally accept the statements and data provided in the taxpayer's tax return. It is usually only later tax audits that spark tax disputes. The tax authorities are entitled to use their findings from tax audits by amending existing notices (tax assessment notices but also declaratory notices of assessment). Thus, to the extent that the findings from a tax audit lead to a higher tax burden, existing notices may be amended to the detriment of the taxpayer. Before amending the notices, the tax auditor completes the audit by preparing an audit report on his or her findings. Such audit reports, however, may not be challenged. Rather, it is only the notices (tax assessment notices or declaratory notices of assessment, respectively) issued in the wake of the audit report that may be submitted by the taxpayer to the courts for review.

The question of whether, and if so in what intervals, a tax audit is carried out regarding a taxpayer normally hinges on the size and level of turnover or profits of the enterprise concerned. The legal default is for large enterprises as well as groups of companies to be subject to tax audits in relation to each fiscal year. Very small enterprises and taxpayers with a low income are audited only exceptionally. Extraordinary transactions or anomalies, however, may trigger tax audits even where lower levels of turnover or profits are involved (e.g., in the case of inconsistencies in the tax return or in the context of restructurings).

iii Administrative appeal procedure

Before a judicial review of the lawfulness of a declaratory notice of assessment or of a tax assessment notice may be sought, the administrative appeal procedure before the tax authority must be completed. This procedure serves the dual purpose of the tax authorities double-checking their own decisions and the caseload of the tax courts being reduced. The administrative appeal must be lodged by the taxpayer with the issuing authority within one month of the taxpayer having been notified of the tax assessment notice. The taxpayer is not, however, required to provide the grounds of his or her appeal within that one-month period; these may be submitted later. An administrative appeal may also initially be lodged as a precaution; for example, if, as the one-month time limit is about to expire, it remains unclear whether or not a notice is lawful. As mentioned earlier, administrative appeal proceedings usually take three to 12 months. In certain circumstances, however, the administrative appeal procedure is excluded. In these cases, the taxpayer has to take legal action directly against the assessment notice. Practically speaking, these cases are rather rare (e.g., in the context of certain mistakes contained in trade-tax assessment notices).

iv Judicial proceedings

If the administrative appeal fails, the tax authority rejects it by way of a formal decision referred to as an administrative appeal decision. The taxpayer is entitled to have the lawfulness of any such administrative appeal decision reviewed by the courts. In general, the tax courts are competent to hear such cases. In rare cases, the measure adopted by the tax authorities needs to be challenged before the general administrative courts.

As a rule, any legal action challenging an administrative appeal decision needs to be filed with the competent tax court within one month of the taxpayer having been notified of the tax assessment notice. The question of which of the 18 lower tax courts is competent to hear the case hinges on which tax authority issued the administrative appeal decision being challenged. The specific decision challenged must be able to be inferred from the complaint. Moreover, the plaintiff must indicate which rights he or she deems breached. It is not obligatory to substantiate the complaint within the one-month time limit.

Once the complaint has been filed, the competent division of the tax court sets a time limit within which the legal action must be substantiated; this is usually within four to six weeks from the filing of the claim. In complicated cases, the time limit for substantiation may be extended upon application.

Once the claim has been substantiated, the tax authority is given the opportunity to submit its comments in writing. Any such comments by the tax authority may, in turn, be commented on by the taxpayer. Usually, the exchange of written pleadings between the parties is completed within about six months of the claim having been substantiated. The further course of judicial proceedings very much depends on the nature of the questions at the heart of the legal action. If the focus is on establishing questions of fact, the court will take evidence. Predominantly, evidence is taken by hearing witnesses and examining documentary evidence; in some cases, experts are consulted. Evidence is taken during a hearing. As a rule, judicial proceedings are completed more quickly if the dispute exclusively involves questions of law. Upon completion of the hearing, the court passes judgment on whether the legal action is admissible and successful on the merits.

Courts are usually keen to bring proceedings to a conclusion without the need for a judgment. The two reasons for this are that drafting a formal judgment involves a significant amount of effort, and judgments do not necessarily truly settle disputes in the sense of creating a lasting legal concord.

If the court has formed its opinion and estimates a case to be clear-cut, it will often indicate to the parties the decision they are to expect. If the judges consider the legal action to be justified, they will invite the tax authority to amend the administrative action challenged (e.g., the tax assessment notice) in favour of the taxpayer to prevent a judgment against the tax authority. Conversely, if the judges do not consider the case to have merit, they will invite the taxpayer to withdraw his or her action in order to avoid its dismissal. About two-thirds of all proceedings are terminated in one of these ways, without any judgment being passed. As mentioned earlier, the average judicial proceedings take about two years.

v Revision proceedings before the Federal Tax Court

If the judicial proceedings before the court of first instance conclude with a judgment that the losing party deems to be incorrect, it may appeal such judgment before Germany's Federal Tax Court. As a rule, however, this option is subject to the lower tax court having granted leave to appeal. If such leave to appeal (revision) has been granted, the losing party can appeal to have the lawfulness of the judgment reviewed by the Federal Tax Court. As mentioned earlier, arguments before the Federal Tax Court are restricted to asserting that the lower tax court erred in its assessment of questions of law. Moreover, the norms allegedly breached must be federal ones (as opposed to ones forming part of the law of the 16 individual German states). In other words, the appellant in revision proceedings is barred from asserting that the facts relied upon by the lower tax court in its decision were inaccurate. Where a losing party believes the facts as assumed by the lower tax court to be inaccurate, that party may achieve a reversal of the judgment rendered by the court of first instance only by successfully asserting before the Federal Tax Court that said judgment had been reached in violation of procedural norms (plea of procedural error). If the Federal Tax Court concurs, it normally refers the legal dispute back to the lower tax court. The first-instance proceedings must then be conducted anew.

Any revision needs to be filed with the Federal Tax Court within one month of the appellant having been notified of the judgment rendered by the lower tax court, and normally needs to be substantiated within two months thereof. Revision proceedings currently take about 20 months on average.

vi Complaint against refusal of leave to appeal with the Federal Tax Court

If the judicial proceedings in the first instance conclude with a judgment with regard to which the lower tax court has refused to grant leave to appeal, the losing party may lodge what is known as a 'complaint against refusal of leave to appeal' with the Federal Tax Court. Such a complaint will be successful if the losing party is able to show that the lower tax court should in fact have granted leave to appeal (revision).

More specifically, the party lodging this complaint must demonstrate that the legal dispute hinged on a question of law that the Federal Tax Court either has not yet ruled upon (thus rendering the matter admissible as being of fundamental significance) or has judged differently from the lower tax court (making the matter admissible on the grounds of divergence).

A complaint against refusal of leave to appeal will also be successful if, before the Federal Tax Court, the judgment by the lower tax court can be shown to have been passed in violation of procedural norms (plea of procedural error). Like other remedies, a complaint against refusal of leave to appeal needs to be filed with the Federal Tax Court within one month of the appellant having been notified of the judgment by the lower tax court, and normally needs to be substantiated within two months thereof. On average, the Federal Tax Court decides on the complaint within six months after it has been filed.

vii Jurisdiction of Germany's Federal Constitutional Court

If the remedies taken by a taxpayer have proven unsuccessful, and provided all remedies for administrative or judicial review have been exhausted, the taxpayer may file a complaint of unconstitutionality with Germany's Federal Constitutional Court in Karlsruhe. Such a complaint will, however, only be successful if the taxpayer can show that the Constitution has been violated. The complaint needs to be filed and substantiated within one month after the complainant has been notified of the final judicial decision. Complaints of unconstitutionality regarding judgments by lower tax courts or by the Federal Tax Court have occasionally been successful in the past. For example, the Federal Constitutional Court found certain instances of tightening of statutory rules (e.g., in the German Income Tax Act) to be in violation of the constitutional prohibition on retroactivity; or that the courts violated the right to a hearing enshrined in the Constitution.

The time involved in proceedings brought before the Federal Constitutional Court fundamentally depends on the specifics of an individual case. Some complaints of unconstitutionality are decided upon in a matter of months; complaints with a particularly broad impact often take several years.

viii Injunctive relief

The procedures outlined so far are aimed at conclusively resolving matters in dispute. A separate question is whether the amount of tax assessed by the tax authority needs to be paid despite a pending legal challenge. As a rule, any tax assessed becomes due and payable even if an administrative appeal has been lodged with the tax office against the underlying tax assessment notice. The same applies if the tax assessment notice (or, more precisely, the adverse administrative appeal decision confirming it) is challenged before the tax courts.

Therefore, to keep from owing the assessed tax, a taxpayer needs to file (simultaneously with his or her administrative appeal or legal action) an application for suspension of enforcement. Such application should be addressed to the tax authority that has issued the notice in question. The authority is obligated to grant the application if a summary examination yields serious doubts about the lawfulness of the notice challenged; in other words, if there are doubts as to the lawfulness of the notice. A suspension of enforcement may also be granted where the payment would cause inequitable hardship for the taxpayer (Section 361 of the German General Tax Code (GTC)).

If the tax authority rejects an application for suspension of enforcement, the taxpayer may submit that decision to the competent lower tax court for review (Section 69 of the German Code of Procedure for Fiscal Courts).

The lower tax court, for its part, likewise determines whether a summary examination yields serious doubts about the lawfulness of the notice challenged, or a particular hardship warrants the suspension sought by the taxpayer.

The decision of the lower tax court may, in turn, be submitted to the Federal Tax Court for review, provided the lower tax court has granted leave to lodge a complaint against its decision with the Federal Tax Court. Applications for suspension of enforcement are decided upon particularly quickly. Normally, decisions by the tax authorities on such applications are a matter of a few working days. If a lower tax court is called upon to review such a decision by a tax office, the court usually reaches its decision within three to six months of the complaint having been filed. The tax authorities will, however, not proceed to enforce assessed taxes while an application for suspension of enforcement is pending.

ix Legal protection in the context of international double taxation

The remedies outlined (in particular administrative appeal and judicial proceedings) are also available to taxpayers who seek to challenge any double taxation arising in international scenarios. Cases in which it proves impossible to conclusively ascertain which of the two states is failing to correctly apply the pertinent double taxation treaty (DTT) bear the danger that legal proceedings at a national level will be unsuccessful (because the national courts in each of the two states will uphold the relevant tax assessment notice as lawful). In these cases, the taxpayer is well advised to apply – simultaneously with remedies on a national level where appropriate – for an intergovernmental mutual agreement procedure, or (to the extent possible) for an intergovernmental arbitration procedure to be initiated.

All DTTs entered into by Germany provide (as a minimum) for an intergovernmental mutual agreement procedure to be conducted. Under most treaties, the taxpayer needs to apply for the initiation of such mutual agreement procedure no later than three years from the double taxation having occurred (only a few treaties contain application time limits of two or four years, respectively). Upon application by the taxpayer, the competent authorities of the states involved will attempt to eliminate any double taxation by way of mutual agreement. In Germany, the relevant application normally needs to be filed with the Bonn-based Federal Central Tax Office. The mutual agreement procedure, however, does not afford any entitlement to an actual elimination of double taxation. Nonetheless, in most cases involving Germany, intergovernmental agreements are reached that eliminate or at least mitigate double taxation.

The risk that any existing double taxation will continue unchanged may be minimised by affording the taxpayer a legal right to also apply for the initiation of intergovernmental arbitration proceedings. If such arbitration proceedings are provided for, the taxation conflict is settled by the arbitral award of an independent body. The arbitral award is binding upon both states. Such proceedings ensure that any taxation in violation of the DTT is always eliminated. To date, arbitration proceedings have been provided for in only a few German DTTs. With regard to the allocation of profits among related persons and the attribution of profits between head office and permanent establishment, the EU Arbitration Convention provides for arbitration proceedings to be conducted (upon application by the taxpayer) if it has proved impossible to eliminate, by way of mutual agreement proceedings, taxation that is in violation of the DTT. Within its scope of application, the Convention serves as an important legal basis for combating double taxation in the context of intra-European scenarios. The Convention has consistently proved itself in practice.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Decisions on administrative appeals

If a taxpayer lodges an administrative appeal against a notice (i.e., a tax assessment notice or a declaratory notice of assessment), he or she must do so with the authority that issued the relevant notice. Within that authority, the administrative appeal is initially dealt with by the official responsible for the notice in question. If that official regards the administrative appeal as unsuccessful on the merits, it is forwarded to a specialised department within the authority that is exclusively tasked with deciding on administrative appeals (the legal redress department). This ensures that the final decision is not taken by the official who was responsible for the challenged notice.

ii Decision on legal actions

If the tax authority rejects the taxpayer's administrative appeal by way of a formal decision, he or she may apply to the competent lower tax court for a review of the lawfulness of that decision. Within the lower tax courts, the organisational divisions entrusted with adjudicating legal actions are referred to as 'senates'. Each senate consists of a total of five judges: three professional judges and two lay judges. In practical terms, the lay judges' influence on the decision is very limited. While they do enjoy equal voting rights, they generally let themselves be guided by the professional judges' vote. Among the three professional judges, it is the presiding judge who is particularly influential. The presiding judge is responsible for the organisation of the senate and presides over hearings. Presiding judges regularly shape the line of decisions taken by their senate.

If the legal dispute is particularly clear-cut in terms of both the questions of fact and the questions of law to be determined, it may be assigned to a sole judge (Section 6 of the German Code of Procedure for Fiscal Courts). Only professional judges are eligible to act as sole judges. The assignment of a case to a sole judge is designed to speed up the judicial proceedings.

iii Decisions on judicial appeals limited to questions of law and complaints against refusals of leave to appeal

The Federal Tax Court, and more specifically the competent senate in each case, decides on judicial appeals limited to questions of law and complaints against refusals of leave to appeal. In both the lower tax courts and the Federal Tax Court, each senate consists of five judges; at the Federal Tax Court, however, there are only professional and no lay judges. Similarly to the lower tax courts, the line taken by a senate in its decisions is shaped, in particular, by its presiding judge.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

i Criminal penalties

Penal sanctions, if any, are not imposed within the framework of disputes on tax matters. Rather, if the tax authorities believe that a taxpayer has committed a tax offence, they will initiate, or cause to be initiated, (separate) criminal proceedings on tax matters against the taxpayer. If the allegations are corroborated, a penalty may be imposed on the taxpayer. Such proceedings are, however, handled by the public prosecutor's office rather than the tax authorities. Likewise, any possible penal sanctions are imposed by general penal courts rather than tax courts. If a taxpayer is proven to have evaded taxes, he or she is usually fined an amount at least equal to the tax evaded. As a rule, tax evasion in excess of €1 million triggers imprisonment.

ii Administrative penalties

Administrative sanctions, by contrast, may be imposed as part of a dispute in tax matters. German procedural law in tax matters provides for such sanctions in the event that the taxpayer fails to meet certain obligations to cooperate, either in time or at all. The most important administrative sanctions in tax matters are as follows:

- a* imposition of a late-filing surcharge of up to €25,000 (if the taxpayer files his or her tax return late or not at all);
- b* imposition of a non-compliance fine (obstruction fee) of between €2,500 and €250,000 (if the taxpayer fails to comply with reasonable demands for clarification made by the tax auditor, either in time or at all); and
- c* imposition of a surcharge of up to €1 million (either if the taxpayer fails to prepare any transfer pricing documentation, or any such documentation prepared proves inadequate).

Administrative sanctions are imposed by way of an administrative act whose lawfulness can be reviewed by way of an administrative appeal and subsequent judicial proceedings (see Section II, supra).

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

A taxpayer is obliged to pay taxes only upon having been formally required, by way of a tax assessment notice, to do so. German tax authorities usually refund to the taxpayer any payments made in the absence of an underlying tax assessment notice. The same applies if and to the extent that any tax is reduced by a subsequent tax assessment notice: a possible overpayment is refunded to the taxpayer.

If, in light of the existence of several tax assessment notices, there is uncertainty regarding the amount of tax imposed and the payments made thereon, the taxpayer may request a special notice in which the tax authority is required to detail any tax amounts assessed and any payments made (Section 218(2) of the GTC). That special notice is referred to as statement of account. If the taxpayer deems the statement of account to be inaccurate, he or she may challenge it by lodging an administrative appeal and subsequently bringing a legal action, where necessary (see Section II supra). The overpayment by the taxpayer (if any) shown in the ‘statement of account’ will be refunded to him or her by the German tax authority.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Administrative acts may only be challenged on the grounds that they are (allegedly) unlawful. The unlawfulness may result from the administrative act being incompatible with the Constitution or with specific tax law provisions. In some cases, the unlawfulness may flow from the fact that the administrative act is not in line with a general instruction of a supreme administrative authority (e.g., a decree by Germany’s Federal Ministry of Finance). In other cases, the unlawfulness may result from the taxpayer in question being discriminated against in relation to another taxpayer. For this to apply, the discrimination would need to qualify as an infringement of the fundamental right to equal treatment (Article 3, Paragraph 1 of the Constitution). If, against this yardstick, an administrative measure proves unlawful, it can normally be challenged by lodging an administrative appeal or bringing a legal action (see Section II, supra).

iii Claimants

In Germany, the focal point of tax court litigation aimed at enforcing a tax refund claim is the respective underlying tax assessment notice (or declaratory notice of assessment, as the case may be). Given that the administrative appeal procedure as well as judicial proceedings almost always concern the administrative appeal or the declaratory notice of assessment in question, both the administrative appeal and legal action must, as a rule, be brought by the very taxpayer to whom the relevant notice had been addressed by the tax authority. For example, if the VAT assessed by a tax authority is excessive, then it is the addressee of the VAT notice who may apply for a reduction of the VAT in the context of lodging an administrative appeal or bringing a legal action.

This also applies where several taxpayers are taxed jointly in the context of group taxation (also referred to in Germany as fiscal unity). In group taxation scenarios, the tax authority must address its tax assessment notice exclusively to the group's parent company (not the subsidiaries). That tax assessment notice also needs to take into account the profits or turnover of the other group members. If the profits or turnover of any one group member – as taken into account in such a tax assessment notice – are too high, then it is not that group member company that is entitled to lodge an administrative appeal or bring legal action, but the company to which the relevant tax assessment notice was addressed (usually, the group's parent company).

Only in exceptional cases may a tax assessment notice be challenged (by way of an administrative appeal or legal action) by someone other than that notice's addressee. For example, a taxpayer may bring legal action against a tax assessment notice that exempts one of his or her competitors from taxation. Such an option for third parties to bring legal action requires, however, that the relevant tax statute applied is relevant to competition (which is only rarely the case).

VI COSTS

Proceedings before both the lower tax courts and the Federal Tax Court are subject to court fees. The amount of these fees depends on the value of the matter in dispute. However, such court fees are to be borne by the taxpayer only if and to the extent that he or she loses. If the taxpayer wins the case, he or she does not have to bear any court fees. For illustration purposes, the following table shows the amount of court fees due for a legal action involving a value of the matter in dispute of €300,000 (or €3 million or €30 million, respectively):

Value of the matter in dispute	Fees for administrative appeal proceedings before the issuing authority	Fees for legal action before the lower tax court	Fees for revision proceedings before the Federal Tax Court
€300,000	No fee	€9,848	€12,310
€3 million	No fee	€50,144	€62,680
€30 million	No fee	€438,944	€548,680

By contrast, the costs for taxpayers' professional advisers in tax matters (lawyers or tax consultants) are, in principle, to be borne by the taxpayer. If and to the extent, however, that the taxpayer wins in court (i.e., the legal action before the lower tax court or the revision proceedings before the Federal Tax Court), the tax authority has to bear such advisers' costs, albeit capped at the relevant statutory amount of advisers' fees.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

As far as tax disputes involving exclusively national (German) scenarios are concerned, dispute settlement instruments have not acquired any significance to date. More specifically, mediation proceedings in tax matters have been discussed by experts but have failed to be introduced. At the same time, there is a widespread use among practitioners of instruments aimed at avoiding tax disputes from the outset (preventive avoidance of disputes).

i Binding ruling for the purposes of settling questions of law

To the extent that conflicts in terms of diverging positions regarding certain legal issues are anticipated, the taxpayer may apply to have the matter clarified in advance by way of a binding ruling. Binding rulings are only issued, however, provided the underlying scenario has not yet been (fully) realised. In other words, a binding ruling cannot be issued with regard to fact patterns that occurred in the past (Section 89 of the GTC). Accordingly, it is important to apply in good time for any binding ruling to be sought. The GTC expressly restricts the scope of binding rulings to questions of law; accordingly, binding rulings may not be sought in relation to questions of fact. Thus, a taxpayer may not ask a tax authority to specify the fact pattern on which it intends to base its decisions; binding rulings are not available to achieve clarification of uncertainties as to the facts of a particular case. Similar to court fees, the fee due (if any) for the issuing of a binding ruling depends on the amount of tax involved. More specifically, a binding ruling is subject to fees if the tax effect of the underlying legal issue amounts to €9,999 or more. If the tax effect amounts to, say, €10,000, the fee is €241; if it amounts to €30 million, the maximum fee of €109,736 is levied.

ii Binding commitment for the purposes of settling questions of law

Rulings applied for by and provided to the taxpayer in the course of a tax audit are not subject to any fees (Sections 204 et seq. of the GTC). This type of ruling is referred to as a binding commitment. This instrument, too, is expressly restricted to questions of law by the applicable statute; binding commitments may not be sought for questions of fact. What is more, when seeking a binding commitment, it is compulsory to delineate the relevant underlying fact pattern.

Furthermore, the fact pattern for which a binding commitment on questions of law is sought needs to form part of the subject matter of the tax audit and possess relevance for the future (i.e., beyond the tax audit).

iii Advance pricing agreements (APAs) regarding transfer prices

APAs are a useful instrument to prevent disputes regarding transfer pricing matters. The tax authorities have been prepared for more than a decade to participate in APAs. Since 2006, APAs have been subject to fees. The basic fee is €20,000 (Section 178a of the GTC).

The German APA programme is designed to resolve actual or potential transfer pricing disputes in a systematic and cooperative manner.

APAs are about agreements to be reached beforehand, and thus for the future; between affiliated companies (and thus taxpayers) and the tax authorities of the relevant states; and on the transfer prices to be applied for a certain period.

Transfer prices are usually agreed in advance for a future period of three to five years.

From a German perspective, APAs involve two distinct relationships: the intergovernmental level, which exclusively concerns the tax authorities of the states in question; and the domestic level, which concerns the relationship between the national German tax authority and the relevant taxpayer.

On the intergovernmental level and in the context of a mutual agreement procedure, the tax authorities of the states concerned agree upon specific transfer prices as binding for defined future periods. In Germany, the binding effect (domestically) of such an intergovernmental agreement is brought about by a separate agreement between the German tax authorities and the taxpayer resident in Germany.

The Bonn-based Federal Central Tax Office is competent for handling the APA procedure. If a German taxpayer wishes to initiate an APA procedure, he or she needs to set out the proposed transfer prices in the context of a preliminary discussion (pre-filing) with the responsible official of the Central Tax Office. If this official deems the proposed (or an amended) transfer price achievable on an intergovernmental level, the taxpayer is invited to formally apply for an APA procedure to be conducted regarding this transfer price. That application then becomes the basis of the intergovernmental part of the APA procedure, which solely involves the tax authorities of the states concerned. Once the participating authorities have agreed a specific transfer price, the taxpayer is notified accordingly.

For the agreed transfer price to become binding domestically (i.e., in Germany), the taxpayer needs to consent to this transfer price in writing to the German tax authorities and formally undertake not to challenge any corresponding tax assessment notices in the future.

The tax authorities may then base future tax assessments on a different transfer price only where certain crucial assumptions integral to the APA fail to materialise during the relevant period, thus making it reasonable for a different transfer price to be applied.

For the most part, German taxpayers' experience with the handling of APA procedures by the German tax authorities is very positive. The APA procedure has its merits, especially where other procedures fail to afford adequate protection against double taxation.

The APA procedure is particularly helpful in constellations in which transfer prices cannot easily be determined, and there is a simultaneous lack of intergovernmental arbitration procedures in relation to the states concerned.

iv Dispute resolution regarding questions of fact

Once a tax dispute is pending, the German tax authorities are barred from accepting any compromise regarding questions of law. As far as such questions of law are concerned, the fundamental principle of lawfulness of taxation (enshrined in the Constitution) is interpreted as obliging the tax authorities to strictly apply the law. That is also why amicable agreements on questions of law are bound to fail.

By contrast, if a dispute is not about questions of law but questions of fact (i.e., about the precise facts that have occurred in a particular case), the tax authorities may reach a settlement agreement (understanding on questions of fact), thus establishing the facts on which taxation should be based in a particular case.

Such understandings on questions of fact very frequently enable the parties to amicably settle existing tax disputes. The responsible tax officials will, however, consent to such a settlement only provided it can be made very clear that the compromise exclusively extends to questions of fact (as opposed to questions of law). In practice, this is feasible in a large number of cases. While such understandings on questions of fact are usually reached in the context of a tax audit, they are also employed in the course of judicial proceedings before the tax courts.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

The German legislator has introduced special anti-abuse rules targeting certain specific constellations. Anti-abuse rules are also contained in some German DTTs. In cases that do not fall within the scope of the special anti-abuse rules, the tax authorities seek to rely on the general anti-abuse rules codified in Section 42 of the GTC.

That umbrella provision stipulates that a structure is deemed abusive if it involves an inappropriate legal structure or, when compared to a (hypothetical) appropriate structure, it leads to a tax advantage not contemplated by statute.

That umbrella provision further stipulates that, conversely, no abuse is deemed to exist where the taxpayer can demonstrate that his or her structure was motivated by non-tax reasons. There is a host of case law regarding the question under which circumstances an abuse is to be assumed to exist.

IX DTTs

Generally, the DTTs entered into by Germany are limited to income tax, corporate income tax, trade tax and inheritance tax. These DTTs are thus of no assistance in eliminating double taxation in the area of VAT. Avoidance of double VAT taxation is, however, effectively ensured by a uniform application of the VAT Directive as overseen by the European Court of Justice. As a result, at least in scenarios within the EU, the risk of double VAT taxation is low.

Over the past few years, the Federal Tax Court has repeatedly found elements of German taxation to be incompatible with the relevant DTTs. These judgments mainly concern income tax, corporate income tax and trade tax, and often involve the taxation of individuals.

In several cases, the Federal Tax Court has clarified the enormous importance of clauses in DTTs that – congruent with Article 9(1) of the OECD Model Tax Convention – allow for income adjustments based on the ‘dealing at arm’s-length principle’ in relations between associated enterprises. The Court has ruled that such clauses do not aim at the immediate correction of profits but at their bilateral demarcation, and that profit corrections under domestic law are therefore limited to elements affecting the amount of the transfer price. If, however, the tax authorities bring forward purely formal objections to the handling of the business relationship between the associated enterprises, the provision of the DTT has an overriding effect.<sup>2</sup> In other words, the treaty-based ‘arm’s-length’ principle only allows an income adjustment based on a domestic rule where the price agreed between associated enterprises is inappropriate as to the amount. For this reason, the tax authorities are not entitled to adjust the depreciation of a loan merely because the domestic parent had issued the loan to its foreign subsidiary without any security and therefore in a way that would be have to be considered 'unusual' among unrelated parties.<sup>3</sup>

A 2011 judgment was the first to expressly address the tax treatment of private equity funds. It dealt with the taxation of two corporations resident in Germany that had invested in a private equity fund set up as a UK limited partnership. In that specific case, the Federal Tax Court held that, under the DTT between the UK and Germany, the German investors were not subject to tax in Germany on their income from the fund. Simultaneously, that income was exempted from taxation in the UK under the provisions of UK law. The Federal Tax Court emphasised that the DTT has to be respected even where the income is not taxed by the other state either.<sup>4</sup> This principle was confirmed by the Federal Tax Court in a judgment of 11 January 2012.<sup>5</sup>

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Given that most disputes in tax matters originate from arguments in the context of tax audits, the tax audits currently underway allow a fairly accurate forecast of which issues are likely to become the subject of judicial proceedings in the future. Looking at current tax audits and taking into account the most recent important statutory amendments, transfer pricing issues in particular are likely to be fought out before the courts. This applies especially to the area of relocation of functions, as the pertinent rules have been tightened in recent years. Other areas in which a significant number of disputes is to be expected in the future include the secondment of employees and (national and international) restructuring.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

No major changes are anticipated that might affect the German system and practice of disputes and litigation in tax matters. A recently introduced act is expected to accelerate judicial proceedings in the medium term, as it enables taxpayers to challenge excessively lengthy proceedings more efficiently. Another improvement for taxpayers expected in the medium-term concerns their protection against double taxation, as the German tax authorities are undertaking considerable efforts to negotiate new DTTs with arbitration clauses, which would extend taxpayers' protection beyond mere mutual agreement procedures. Together, these measures should ensure that Germany's level of legal protection in tax matters, which is already fairly good, will be further improved.

GREECE

I INTRODUCTION

Tax disputes in Greece are common and occupy a considerable part of the administrative and judicial procedures. The right of judicial protection, enshrined in Article 20, Paragraph 1 of the Greek Constitution, covers acts and omissions of organs of the state, including those of the tax administration.

The financial crisis and the corresponding need for increased public revenues have led to significant changes in the administrative taxation procedure arising from the memoranda signed between Greece and its international lenders. In 2010, there was a major reform in the administrative courts procedure with a particular focus on tax disputes with a view to discouraging exercise of unnecessary legal remedies and make the allocation of court competences more efficient. This reform has so far proven fruitful at least in terms of figures. For instance, the number of pending judicial recourses before the Administrative Court of First Instance with regards to tax disputes has fallen from 142,852 in 2012 to 30,365 in 2016, and the number of tax cases pending before the Council of State (i.e., the supreme administrative court) has fallen from 5,663 in 2012 to 5,007 in 2016. (Pending appeals before the Administrative Court of Appeal have slightly increased from 11.322 in 2012 to 13.279 in 2016, largely due to transfer of competence to the Court of Appeals to judge, as a first instance court, on major tax cases).<sup>2</sup>

Moreover, recently, fundamental steps were taken in the tax procedure with the introduction of a uniform Tax Procedure Code<sup>3</sup> (TPC), in force since 1 January 2014. This legislative initiative aimed to codify the previously dispersed provisions on all aspects of the administrative taxation procedure, including, inter alia, the submission of tax returns, the tax audit procedure, and the collection of taxes and penalties.

Significant changes were incorporated into the new TPC as regards the procedure for challenging acts and omissions of the tax administration. A tax dispute is now initiated by a mandatory administrative recourse before a special directorate of the Ministry of Finance, the Dispute Resolution Directorate, as a prerequisite to seeking judicial recourse before the administrative courts. The effect of this major change in the dispute resolution procedure as well as of the other provisions of the TPC remains to be evaluated in the near future when the new system will begin to mature.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

i The tax assessment act

In general terms, the process of tax disputes commences with the receipt of an assessment act, which constitutes a personal administrative act. The assessment act is issued based on either the tax return or data filed by the taxpayer or, in the case of a tax audit, the report of the audit.

Under the TPC, a taxpayer may file an initial tax return (Article 18, Paragraph 1), or an amending tax return if he or she becomes aware of a mistake or an omission in his or her initial return (Article 19, Paragraph 1). The TPC also provides for a tax return ‘with reservation’, when the taxpayer has doubts as to the existence of a tax obligation for a certain item of his or her return (Article 20, Paragraph 1). The reservation can either be accepted or rejected by the General Secretary for Public Revenue within 90 days from the filing of the tax return.

Under the TPC, a tax assessment act may be categorised as follows:

- a* direct tax assessment act (Article 31), known also as self-assessment: it results directly from the filing of a tax return by a taxpayer;
- b* administrative tax assessment act (Article 32): may be issued by the tax administration based not only on a tax return, but also on other data available at the administration;
- c* estimated tax assessment act (Article 33): may be issued when a taxpayer has failed to file a tax return. Upon filing of a tax return, even an overdue one, the estimated tax assessment ceases to apply and a new one is issued based on the filed return;
- d* corrective tax assessment act (Article 34): may be issued if, following a tax audit, a tax return is proven mistaken or inaccurate. Once a corrective tax assessment act is issued, a new corrective tax assessment act may be issued based only on the existence of ‘new elements’ (i.e., elements that could not have been known by the tax administration during the initial tax audit); and
- e* pre-emptive tax assessment act (Article 35): may be issued before the lapse of the deadline for submission of a tax return when there are specific indications that the taxpayer intends to leave the country, thus jeopardising the collection of the tax, especially through the transfer of assets to third parties. The pre-emptive tax assessment act is followed by a corrective tax assessment act within one year from the date of issuance (Paragraph 3).

The right of the tax administration to issue a tax assessment act must be exercised within five years from the lapse of the year during which the deadline for submission of the tax return expires (Article 36, Paragraph 1 TPC). This time limit might be extended under certain circumstances. In cases of tax evasion, the time limit is 20 rather than five years (Paragraph 3).

The law allows the tax administration to conduct tax audits to assess the correctness of the facts declared by taxpayers and to assess their tax liability in general. In particular, the tax administration possesses extensive powers during audits, such as the lifting of professional and tax secrecy. Following a tax audit, the tax administration serves a notice to the taxpayer containing the results of the audit and a provisional corrective assessment act. The taxpayer can state his or her views on the provisional tax correction in writing within 20 days, and the tax administration issues the final corrective tax assessment act within one month as from the filing of the taxpayer's views.

Disputes can also arise from omissions of the tax administration. An omission exists where the administration, although obliged by law, fails to issue an individual administrative act to regulate a particular legal relationship. Such omission occurs with the lapse of the deadline provided for in the legislation for the issuance of the relevant act. When an omission takes place following a petition from the taxpayer for the issuance of a particular act, it constitutes a tacit rejection of the petition challengeable by the petitioner. In practice, a large number of disputes are generated by omissions of the administration.

ii Challenging the acts of the tax administration

Acts and omissions of the tax administration can be contested by the taxpayer before the Dispute Resolution Directorate, as provided in Article 63 TPC. As mentioned above, this is a mandatory internal review procedure (quasi-judicial action) established as a prerequisite before referring the dispute to the administrative courts in an effort to alleviate the burden of accumulated cases before the latter.

Exceptionally, the taxpayer can challenge directly before the competent administrative courts only an estimated tax assessment act without the prerequisite of the quasi-judicial action (Article 35, Paragraph 1 TPC). The exception also applies to disputes falling within the competency of the President of the Administrative Court of First Instance (see Section III.i, infra).

The quasi-judicial action must be submitted before the competent tax administration within 30 days from the notification of the act or the tacit rejection, and is forwarded to the Dispute Resolution Directorate within seven days. The decision of the Dispute Resolution Directorate must be issued within 120 days as from the day of submission. Non-issuance of a decision within the relevant time limit is considered tacit rejection of the action (and the lapse of the time limit constitutes a notification of the rejection). Although not explicitly provided for in Article 63, it is accepted that the tax administration is obliged to inform taxpayers in writing on any administrative act of the right to file a quasi-judicial action and the inadmissibility of a direct recourse to the administrative courts. An omission of the aforementioned notification means that a direct recourse might be admissible.<sup>4</sup>

Upon filing of the quasi-judicial action, payment of 50 per cent of the disputed amount is suspended, provided that the remaining 50 per cent is paid to the tax administration. Depending on the outcome of the case, the tax administration either refunds to the taxpayer any excess amount paid in advance or any additional payment that becomes due. A payment suspension petition may be filed for the former 50 per cent (which is immediately payable), but such suspension may be granted only on the grounds of ‘irrevocable damage’ to the payer. Non-issuance of a decision on the suspension application within 30 days from its submission constitutes tacit rejection.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Composition and role of each tribunal – competent courts

Tax disputes fall within the competency of the ordinary administrative courts, which are made up of two degrees, the Administrative Court of First Instance and the Administrative Court of Appeal.

From 2016 onwards, tax disputes up to the amount of €60,000 fall within the competency of the single-member Administrative Court of First Instance.<sup>5</sup> Its decisions are subject to appeal before the single-member Administrative Court of Appeal. Tax disputes ranging between €60,000 and €150,000 fall within the competency of the three-member Administrative Court of First Instance. Its decisions are subject to appeal before the three-member Administrative Court of Appeal. Tax disputes exceeding €150,000 fall within the sole competence of the three-member Administrative Court of Appeal, and hence taxpayers in these disputes are limited to one level of jurisdiction; this has been heavily criticised in theory. The object of the tax dispute is determined on the basis of the amount of the main tax and not the total imputed amount.

Furthermore, non-pecuniary tax disputes (e.g., the non-issuance of a tax clearance certificate, the refusal of approval of tax books and records) as well as tax disputes stemming from the application of conservatory measures in urgent cases (under Article 46 TPC) fall within the competency of the President of the Administrative Court of First Instance, whose decisions are irrevocable.

A basic principle of Greek constitutional law is the separation of powers (Article 26, Constitution). This means that the administrative courts are totally independent to rule upon any decision falling within their competence.

ii Judicial recourse

Upon an explicit negative decision or tacit rejection (due to the lapse of the deadline for issuance of a decision) by the Dispute Resolution Directorate, the taxpayer has the right to file a judicial recourse before the competent administrative courts (Article 63, Paragraph 8 TPC) in accordance with the Code of Administrative Courts Procedure.<sup>6</sup> The judicial recourse must be filed within 30 days following the notification of the decision or the lapse of the 120-day time limit for the issuance of a decision by the Dispute Resolution Directorate. The deadline is extended to 90 days if the taxpayer resides abroad and the time limit is suspended from 1 to 31 August.

6 Ibid.

iii Right to appeal

A decision of the Administrative Court of First Instance, if the relevant dispute exceeds €5,000, may be subject to an appeal before the Administrative Court of Appeal filed either by the taxpayer or the tax administration. An appeal must be filed within 60 days as from the day that the decision of the Administrative Court of First Instance is served to the party entitled to appeal. In any case, the appeal cannot be filed after three years as from the publication of the first instance decision.

The decision of the Administrative Court of Appeal may be subject to a petition for the cassation of the case before the Council of State. A petition for the cassation of the case may even be filed in respect of cases that are resolved at first and only degree by the three-member Administrative Court of Appeal (i.e., disputes exceeding €150,000 that fall within the sole competence of the three-member Administrative Court of Appeal). The relevant dispute for such a petition to be admissible must exceed €40,000.

iv Scope of judicial control

The competence of the administrative courts is not limited to a legality control of the contested act, but they review the contested acts both in relation to substance and legality, within the limits of the judicial recourse (Article 79, Paragraph 5 Code of Administrative Courts Procedure). The limits of the judicial recourse are determined by the claim as well as the grounds set out in it. In relation to the review of the substance of the contested act, the court is limited by the judicial recourse and is prohibited from worsening the position of the claimant (non reformation in pejus). In relation to the review of the legality of the contested act, the court has the authority, on its own initiative, to examine infringement of 'res judicata' even if such a request is not included in the recourse. In the framework of a petition of cassation, the Council of State may examine grounds related solely to the legality of the act.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Infringements of the tax legislation can result in administrative and criminal penalties.

i Administrative penalties

Administrative penalties mainly consist of fines and are provided for in the TPC (Chapter 10). In some cases, the legislator provides for penalties in the form of deprivation of rights, such as the right to file a lawsuit in the case of failure to declare income from real estate.

The TPC distinguishes between penalties relating to procedural infringements (Articles 54 and 56) and penalties relating to substantive infringements (i.e., non-compliance with substantive obligations stemming from the tax legislation that result in the non-payment or late payment of tax (Articles 58, 58A and 59)). In addition, if any amount of tax is not paid by the due date, the taxpayer is obliged to pay interest on such amount for the period from the due date to the date the tax is actually paid. The interest rate is currently set at 8.51 per cent annually (Article 53).

Procedural infringements include, inter alia, non-filing or late filing of tax returns, non-compliance with the bookkeeping requirement and non-issuance of a receipt. Penalties for procedural infringements can range between €100 and €2,500, and can be quadrupled in cases of repetition. Penalties are also provided for procedural transfer pricing infringements (Article 56). These include late, incomplete or inaccurate filing, or non-filing of the summary information memorandum or the transfer pricing file, and the relevant fines range between €500 and €2,000.

If, following a tax audit, the amount of tax shown on the tax return understates the amount of tax required to be shown as per a corrective tax assessment performed by the tax administration, then the taxpayer is subject to a fine ranging from 10 to 50 per cent of the understated amount according to the size of the understatement as compared with the total tax due by the tax return. There is a special provision for the calculation of such fine on the understated amount in relation to VAT and withholding taxes (Articles 58A and 59). Further, in cases of failure to file a tax return, the fine amounts to 50 per cent of the amount of tax not paid. If following the audit, more than one fine is applicable pursuant to procedural as well as substantive infringements, the larger fine is imposed.

The imposition of administrative penalties falls within the competence of the General Secretary for Public Revenue and the relevant tax administration upon authorisation. The administrative act imposing the relevant penalty can also be contested by the taxpayer before the Dispute Resolution Directorate by filing a quasi-judicial action (see Section II.ii. supra).

The tax administration has the authority, in urgent cases and in cases where the collection of tax is at risk, to take all necessary measures on the basis of a title provided for in the TPC, even before the debt maturity, to secure the collection of taxes. Such measures include the imposition of a seizure of moveable assets, real estate, property rights and claims, and in general all assets of the debtor, either held by the debtor or held by third parties on behalf of the debtor.

The tax administration may proceed with enforced collection methods provided for in the Code of Collection of Public Revenue<sup>7</sup> 30 days after notification to the taxpayer that he or she is in default of tax obligations or tax fines. The notification obligation does not apply in cases of seizure of money or monetary claims held by the debtor or any third party. In cases of suspicion that the taxpayer is transferring assets to another person or preparing to flee the jurisdiction, or take any other action that will jeopardise the collection of the tax, the tax administration is entitled to proceed with enforced collection methods or to write a mortgage prior to the deadline for the payment of taxes or the notification of default or the lapse of the aforementioned 30-day period from the notification of default.

ii Criminal penalties

Pursuant to the provisions of the TPC, liabilities and criminal penalties may be imposed for the following acts or omissions:

- a* wilful tax evasion of income tax, special real estate tax (EFA) and unified real estate possession tax (ENFIA) by concealing net income or revenue from any source, especially by failing to file tax returns, filing inaccurate tax returns or making false registrations of transactions in the accounting books (Article 66, Paragraph 1(a));
- b* wilful tax evasion by failing to pay VAT, withholding taxes, duties and contributions, by not paying the correct amounts or offsetting amounts due, or making false returns in relation to the amount of the above taxes and as a result receives a refund (Article 66, Paragraph 1(b));
- c* wilful tax evasion by failing to pay shipping tax (Article 66, Paragraph 1(c)); and

- d* issuing or accepting false or fictitious invoices or forging invoices, irrespective of whether payment of tax has been avoided (Article 66, Paragraph 5).

In cases of these tax evasion offences, the following criminal penalties are provided in law:

- a* a minimum period of two years' imprisonment for evading tax amounting over €100,000 per year, or €50,000 in the case of VAT;
- b* incarceration (a minimum of five years' and a maximum of 20 years' imprisonment) for evading tax amounting over €150,000 per year, or €100,000 in the case of VAT; and
- c* a minimum of three months' imprisonment for issuing or accepting false or fictitious invoices, or forging invoices. If the total amount of fictitious invoices exceeds €75,000, the imprisonment sentence increases to a minimum of one year, and incarceration of five to 10 years if the total amount of fictitious invoices exceeds €200,000.

The TPC provides that with the completion of the tax audit and the issuance of the final corrective tax assessment act, the tax administration shall refer to the criminal prosecutor such acts that constitute a tax evasion offence in accordance with Article 66. Further, criminal proceedings are not affected by the filing of a quasi-judicial action or judicial recourse before the administrative courts.

Finally, non-payment of monetary debts owed to the state for a time period exceeding four months is considered a criminal offence, punishable with imprisonment. The relevant penalty is a minimum period of one year of imprisonment if the total amount owed exceeds €100,000 and a minimum period of three years of imprisonment if the total amount owed exceeds €200,000.<sup>8</sup>

i Recovering overpaid tax

In cases where a taxpayer has paid tax that is not due, he or she is entitled to a tax refund after making, to that effect, a written claim to the competent tax administration. A party entitled to a refund might be the taxpayer who paid the tax, but also, in cases of withholding taxes, the third party on behalf of whom the tax was withheld (Article 42 TPC).

If the taxpayer is entitled to a refund, the tax administration first offsets the refundable amount against the taxpayer's liability for any other taxes and then refunds the remaining excess balance to the taxpayer within 90 days of the written request. Exceptionally, for claims regarding the refund of VAT payments from taxpayers not resident in Greece, the deadline is extended to four months. It should be noted that the taxpayer may agree, by a written statement included in the claim for refund, that the tax administration withholds any remaining excess balance to offset it against the taxpayer's future tax liabilities. The right to claim a tax refund lapses at the same time that the right of the tax administration to issue a tax assessment act lapses. Finally, in cases of an overpayment of tax, interest is paid to the taxpayer from the date of application for a refund to the date on which the notification of the refund is made, unless the refund is made within the prescribed 90-day period.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

In accordance with Article 9 of the TPC, public rulings (circulars) issued by the tax administration that set out the administration's interpretation of the application of tax legislation are binding on the tax administration itself until revoked or superseded by legislation. However, such rulings are not binding on taxpayers.

With the exception of public rulings, other statements or interpretations concerning a taxpayer's liability made by an officer of the tax administration are not binding.

iii Claimants

The persons entitled to submit a quasi-judicial action based on Article 63 TPC (see Section II.ii., supra) include the person against whom the tax assessment act has been issued, and any third parties being jointly and severally liable with the liable person.

With regard to judicial recourses, in accordance with the Code of Administrative Courts Procedure (Article 64), the right to file recourse is granted to those having a direct, personal and existing legitimate interest or being entitled to such a right by a special provision of the law. This provision covers primarily the persons and legal entities against whom the tax assessment act was issued, but persons with joint and several liability for the payment of the disputed amount, including directors and administration liquidators, are also granted the locus standi to challenge the tax administration's act (Article 50 TPC).

VI COSTS

Proceedings before the administrative courts are subject to fees that must be paid for the action to be admissible.

In the case of pecuniary disputes, for the filing and hearing of a case, the applicant must pay a fee equal to 1 per cent of the disputed amount, with a ceiling of €15,000 (Article 277, Paragraph 3 Code of Administrative Courts Procedure, as amended by Article 37, Paragraph 5 L4446/2016). One-third of this fee must be paid upon filing of the recourse, and the remaining two-thirds by the day of the hearing, otherwise the recourse is rejected as inadmissible. If the amount of the fee exceeds €3,000, then by the day of the hearing €3,000 is payable, and the remaining amount, up to the ceiling of €15,000, becomes payable with the final decision of the competent court if the recourse is rejected (if the recourse is accepted, the amount already paid is refunded to the applicant). The aforementioned fee is payable both in cases of a judicial recourse as well as an appeal before the competent courts. It should also be noted that a prerequisite for the admissibility of the appeal is that the appellant has paid 20 per cent of the disputed amount before the day set for the hearing of the appeal unless the appellant has been granted a suspension of the execution of the first instance decision.

In accordance with the Code of Administrative Courts Procedure, if the judicial recourse or appeal is partially accepted, the court fee is payable in part, upon the discretion of the court. In addition, it is up to the discretion of the court to order the refund of the court fee even if the recourse is rejected based on the individual circumstances (Article 277, Paragraph 10 Code of Administrative Courts Procedure).

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

In 2011, an arbitration procedure for tax disputes was introduced for the first time as an alternative to judicial recourse.<sup>9</sup> In that regard, provision has been made for the creation of a new independent body: the Body of Tax Arbitrators. However, the arbitration procedure remains a future aspiration, as it has not been activated to date.

Although there is no general advance clearing or ruling system in Greece, there are special provisions with regards to affiliated persons as defined in the Income Tax Code<sup>10</sup> (Article 22 TPC). In particular, affiliated persons may request an advance pricing agreement by the tax administration regarding the application of the tax legislation and the determination of the arm's-length condition for certain future transactions.

Furthermore, by virtue of L2216/1994, Greece has implemented the Convention on the elimination of double taxation in connection with the adjustment of profits of associated enterprises<sup>11</sup> (Convention 90/436/EEC) and the mutual agreement and arbitration procedures provided for therein. Through a recently voted amendment (Article 59, Paragraph 2 L4438/2016) to the TPC, the details of the procedure of mutual agreement provided for in Convention 90/436/EEC and in the majority of double taxation conventions concluded by Greece are set out. In particular, Article 63A, added to the TPC, provides that such mutual agreement procedure shall be conducted by the tax administration, and its outcome shall be published as a decision of mutual agreement, which is serviced to the taxpayer. The taxpayer can accept the decision within 60 days from its service; upon acceptance, the decision is not challengeable by means of a quasi-judicial action or any other recourse.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

A general anti-abuse rule was introduced in Greece with the revised TPC (Article 38), following the model of the EU Commission's Recommendation for Aggressive Tax Planning.<sup>12</sup> Under Article 38, the tax administration can ignore during the tax assessment any artificial arrangement or series of arrangements aiming to avoid taxation that lead to a tax benefit.

According to the wording of the provision, arrangements are considered artificial if they lack financial or commercial substance. The tax administration, in examining the potential artificiality of an arrangement shall examine whether:

- a* the legal characterisation of the individual steps that an arrangement consists of is inconsistent with the legal substance of the arrangement as a whole;
- b* the arrangement is carried out in a manner that would not ordinarily be employed in what is expected to be reasonable business conduct;
- c* the arrangement includes elements that have the effect of offsetting or cancelling each other;
- d* the arrangements are circular in nature; and

- e the tax benefit is not reflected in the business risks undertaken by the taxpayer or its cash flows.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

To date, Greece has concluded double taxation conventions with 57 states.<sup>13</sup> These bilateral conventions are transposed into national law by a legislative act and override domestic legislation by virtue of a constitutional provision. They are primarily based on the OECD's Model Convention on Income and Capital.

Double taxation conventions are interpreted according to the wording of the conventions as well as relevant commentary, and not according to domestic legislation. As international agreements, double taxation conventions shall be interpreted in accordance with the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (1969). In relation to the double taxation conventions drafted in accordance with OECD's Model Convention, the OECD Guidance provides a useful soft law tool.

In general terms, the Greek courts respect and interpret properly the provisions of double taxation conventions. For example, in a recently issued judgment,<sup>14</sup> the Council of State, by taking into consideration the provisions of the commentary of the OECD Model Convention, ruled that a resident of Germany whose spouse was a resident of Greece was not required to file a joint tax return with his spouse in Greece despite the express opposite provision of the Greek law.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Regarding business income taxation, apart from classic items such as the determination of the taxable base through the deduction of business expenses, transfer pricing is becoming a hot issue for the tax administration. Particularly from 2014 onwards, the tax administration has issued additional guidance on the application of the transfer pricing documentation rules and the implementation of the procedure of an advanced pricing arrangement. Further, there has been a large number of ministerial circulars regarding the implementation of transfer pricing legislation, and most recently the new tax rules ratified on 1 August 2016<sup>15</sup> concerning transfer pricing compliance rules and audits. Importantly, as of 1 January 2014, the transfer pricing documentation requirements apply to all intercompany transactions, even those of an immaterial nature. Transfer pricing issues are also likely to draw more attention in corporate tax audits.

Moreover, there has been an increasing emphasis by the tax administration on individuals, and particularly high net worth ones. In particular, extensive income tax audits have recently been conducted by the tax administration for tax years starting in 2000 by applying indirect audit methods. The Income Tax Code (Article 28) and TPC (Article 27) make provision for the use of indirect audit methods for the calculation of the income of individuals and legal entities. To date, ministerial guidance has been provided for the use of three of the five available indirect audit methods, and only with regards to individuals. Those methods have been widely used by the tax administration in relation to audits stemming from remittances of huge amounts by Greek residents abroad, a practice widely followed in recent years due to the uncertainty created by the crisis.

XI    OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

An important ongoing development in tax administration is the creation of an autonomous revenue agency. By virtue of L4389/2016, from 2017 onwards the tax administration will no longer be a division of the Ministry of Finance (as has been the case so far, with regards to the General Directorate of Public Revenue), but will be an autonomous body with functional independence as well as administrative and financial autonomy, and will not be subject to the control of other public bodies. The complexity and length of the relevant legislative acts setting out the details of the functioning of the new autonomous body could create some discomfort upon transition, but it is hoped that this will last only during the infant stage.

INDIA

I INTRODUCTION

The integrity and efficiency of any tax administration system hinges upon the creditability of its dispute resolution mechanism in the eyes of the taxpayers. For a developing economy such as India, where the courts and tribunals are over-burdened with disputes from every aspect of life, it becomes imperative to have an efficient and cost effective tax system for the assessment and payment of taxes so as to relieve taxpayers from the burden of vexatious tax litigations and endless disputes, and equally provide them with suitable avenues for dispute resolution.

With the intention of achieving that goal, the government, in its proposals for 2016, emphasised encouraging use of an e-assessment procedure to make tax assessment proceedings objective and less time consuming. The approach of the government is therefore to shift the economy towards a 'broad base, low rate' taxation regime. The emphasis on 'digital India' and a 'cashless economy' must, therefore, be seen in the same light.

Recent times have witnessed continuous efforts of the tax authorities as well as the government to improve the image of India's tax administration and tax collection, and moves are constantly being made along these lines. It is not an exaggeration to state that the Indian policy reforms are moving in a direction where India being viewed as an adversarial jurisdiction is removed over a relatively short period of time.

The chief concern of taxpayers, including multinational companies, that the tax authorities frequently adopt aggressive positions inconsistent with both international and domestic taxation norms and principles, has also been addressed by the current administration, and ensuring the ease of doing business remains the underlying objective of the government in all the policies it is formulating.

The grass-root problem of the prolonged continuation of tax disputes at various levels in India has not yet received the required attention of the policymakers. The main reason for tax litigation is a lack of clarity in the law that makes it susceptible to multiple interpretations. Further, the existence of multiple appellate levels through which a disputed issue has to pass before attaining certainty, and the existence of conflicting opinions from various appellate fora and authorities across the country, also contribute to delay and a multiplicity of proceedings. Another reason for the increasing number of tax disputes and litigation is an understaffed and inexperienced tax administration tackling the rapidly evolving tax laws and the issues arising thereunder.

The mechanical application of laws, arbitrary tax demands and protracted litigation coupled with the aggressive stance taken by the revenue department in the past has made India infamous for its adversarial approach, which drew criticism to such an extent that India was perceived as a non-tax friendly jurisdiction. However, the government has advocated the need for a non-adversarial tax regime, with the focus shifting towards enhancing efficiency by reducing the burden of compliance.

In addressing these concerns, a number of worthwhile measures have been undertaken to encourage a non-adversarial tax regime and to fuel growth. For example, several departmental office instructions have been issued with the overall aim of building capacity, improving the quality of assessments and encouraging the e-assessment procedure; and regarding the decision to not to pursue specific issues before the Apex body, etc., apart from the ratification of a mutual agreement procedure (MAP), and the entering into of unilateral or bilateral advance pricing arrangements (APAs) to bring clarity to the transfer pricing regime.

On the other hand, the stringent Black Money (Undisclosed Foreign Income and Assets) and Imposition of Tax Act 2015 has also been enacted with the objective of preventing income and assets from being illegitimately kept outside the purview of the Indian tax net. Going ahead with the idea of tapping black money within the country, the government first introduced an income disclosure scheme effective 1 June 2016, with an overall outflow of 45 per cent, including interest and penalties, to be paid on such undisclosed income, and 500 rupee and 1,000 rupee denomination banknotes were eventually withdrawn with effect from 9 November 2016. These steps are further seen in the light of the inclusion of unorganised sectors within the ambit of income, since a large segment of the country's economy works on a cash-based system, thereby evading tax assessment and payment. As a result, the government has also proposed another disclosure scheme for people to 'come clean' by paying 50 per cent of tax on junked currency deposited in banks post-demonetisation.

In terms of dispute resolution mechanisms, India already has in place an elaborate structure of dealing with tax disputes. The statute provides for a five-tier appellate hierarchy for resolving conflicts between the revenue department and taxpayers, of which the higher two in the hierarchy are only law-finding fora. In addition to this, certain alternate dispute resolution mechanisms are also provided for in certain specified cases, along with procedures for advance rulings and APAs.

Historically, in the pre-Constitution era, any interference by the high courts in revenue matters pertaining to the exercise of their original jurisdiction was prohibited. However, the revenue enactments had provisions whereby the jurisdiction of the high courts could be invoked for the limited purpose of the interpretation of statutes.

Subsequently, over the years, the bar on the high courts dealing with revenue matters was removed by the Constitution. Further, the Constitution declared that no taxes shall be levied or collected save by the authority of law. It conferred power, in the widest terms possible, on the high courts and the Supreme Court (SC) to issue writs and orders to prevent any manner of illegality or impropriety. The right was conferred on taxpayers to test in courts the very validity of the provisions of revenue law on the touchstone of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

As a result, the high courts and the SC are no longer mere advisers on specific points on which their opinion is sought, but have been given the role of ensuring that revenue laws are enacted in accordance with the Constitution, and that powers under the enactments are exercised in accordance with the statute with due regard to the principles of natural justice.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Under the current scheme of the Income Tax Act 1961 (Act), various remedies are available to a taxpayer, when he or she is aggrieved by the action or order of an assessing officer (AO): appellate, administrative and writ remedy, alternative dispute mechanism, and advance rulings and APAs.

The appellate, administrative and writ procedures available under the provisions of the Act are described below.

i Appellate remedy

Every person, including a company and a firm, is required to furnish a return of his or her income in the prescribed form. An AO examines the income return filed by a taxpayer, and frames the assessment by applying the provisions of the Act. The Act also empowers the AO to make a reassessment, within the prescribed time limit, if he or she has reason to believe that the income chargeable to tax has escaped the original assessment. Special provisions have also been enacted to assess or reassess the income of taxpayers for the preceding six years, irrespective of whether an assessment or reassessment has been concluded already, wherein 'search proceedings' were initiated.

When any tax, interest, penalty or fine is payable in consequence of any of the orders mentioned above, a notice will be served to the taxpayer demanding to pay the sum in the prescribed manner.

The Act and the general principles of natural justice mandate that the AO give the taxpayer adequate opportunity of being heard in case he or she disagrees with the quantum of income and tax declared by the taxpayer, or certain positions adopted in the return of income.

Under the provisions of the Act, the taxpayer has a right of appeal where he or she feels aggrieved by the order of the AO. However, the taxpayer has no inherent right of appeal unless the Act specifically provides that a particular order is appealable. Accordingly, to avail of the privilege to appeal, every person seeking to fight an appeal must ensure that he or she fulfils every condition, procedure and restriction provided under the law for his or her appeal to be considered by the appropriate authority.

There are four levels of appeal under the Act:

- a* first appeal, where an appeal against an order of the AO lies with the Commissioner of Income Tax (Appeals) (CIT(A));
- b* second appeal, where an appeal against an order of the CIT(A) can be referred by the taxpayer or by the Tax Department to the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal (ITAT);

- c third appeal, where the taxpayer or the Tax Department may refer an appeal against an order of the ITAT to the high court on a substantial question of law arising out of the order of the ITAT; and
- d fourth and final appeal, where an order of the high court can be challenged either by the taxpayer or by the Tax Department before the SC, which is the final appellate authority.

First appeal: CIT(A)

The first appeal against the order of the AO lies with the CIT(A) under Section 246A of the Act. The taxpayer is required to file an appeal in the prescribed form along with the requisite fee within 30 days from the date of payment of the tax in cases where an appeal is preferred to deny the liability to deduct tax at source in certain cases in terms of Section 248 of the Act, or the date of service of the notice of the demand relating to the assessment or penalty, or the date of the intimation of an order (as the case may be).

The CIT(A) functions under the administrative control of the Ministry of Finance. In an appeal against an order of assessment, the CIT(A) has the power to confirm, reduce, enhance or annul the order passed by the AO. However, the CIT(A) has no power to set aside the appeal. In an appeal against an order imposing a penalty, the CIT(A) may confirm or cancel the order to make a variation to reduce or enhance the amount of penalty. The CIT(A) may also grant a stay against the demand raised by the Tax Department in consequence of the impugned order, if it deems fit. Further, with the objective of easing the stay process, which was viewed as partisan and favouring the Revenue, the Central Board of Direct Taxes (CBDT) has standardised the requirement of an upfront payment amounting to 15 per cent of the disputed amount as a pre-condition for requesting the stay of demand disputed before the CIT(A).<sup>2</sup>

The CIT(A) may decide such appeal within a period of one year from the end of the financial year in which such appeal is filed.

Disputes can arise due to an incorrect or erroneous filing of an income return. To resolve these, the legislation provides a mechanism for filing a revised return within the prescribed time limit.

Similarly, the provisions of the Act empower the income tax authorities to amend their orders with a view to rectifying mistakes on record within the prescribed time limit.

The other appellate remedies relating to appeals before the courts and tribunals are discussed in Section III, infra.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

As previously suggested, an aggrieved taxpayer has the opportunity to file an appeal with the higher authorities against an order of the CIT(A).

Specific monetary limits and conditions have been prescribed by the CBDT, the apex direct tax administrative body, for appeals to be filed by the Tax Department before the ITAT, the high court and the SC. Accordingly, appeals are not generally filed by the Tax Department in cases where the tax effect does not exceed the prescribed monetary limits. However, the CBDT has also instructed that the monetary limits should not be the only guiding factor and filing of appeals should be decided strictly on merits.

2 E.No. 404/72/93-ITCC dated 29 February 2016.

i Levels of appeal

The mechanism under each of the above-mentioned levels of appeal is given below.

Second appeal: ITAT

A taxpayer or the Tax Department may object to any order passed by the CIT(A) by directing the AO to file an appeal before the ITAT under Section 253 of the Act. The aggrieved party is required to submit the appeal in the prescribed manner within 60 days of the date on which the order sought to be appealed is communicated to him or her. A recent incentive<sup>3</sup> provided to taxpayers, however, is that the Tax Department cannot move in an appeal to the ITAT if the pecuniary value of the case is less than 1 million rupees.

The ITAT may hear and decide every appeal within a period of four years from the end of the financial year in which the appeal is filed. The ITAT is the final fact-finding authority and, accordingly, on all questions of fact, orders passed by the ITAT shall be final and binding on the taxpayer as well as the Tax Department. The ITAT may also grant a stay against a demand raised by the Tax Department in consequence of the impugned order, if it deems fit.

The ITAT functions under the aegis of the Ministry of Law and Justice and takes the form of a judicial system. It operates across 21 cities and has 105 members. Each city has one or more benches. As of July 2016, ITAT had, on average, about 880 cases pending per member.<sup>4</sup>

Third appeal: high courts

Every order of the ITAT that involves a substantial question of law is appealable to the relevant high court under Section 260A of the Act. The appeal is required to be filed in the prescribed form within 120 days from the date that the order appealed against is received by the aggrieved party. The appeal is required to be heard by a bench of not less than two judges, and should be decided in accordance with the opinion of the majority of the judges. In a recent circular,<sup>5</sup> the CBDT has barred the tax authorities to appeal to the high court where the pecuniary value of the case is less than 2 million rupees.

Fourth appeal: SC

An appeal shall arrive with the SC from any judgment of the high court under Section 261 of the Act, provided that the high court certifies the case to be fit for appeal to the SC. The appeal may be filed by the Commissioner of Income Tax (Appeals) or a taxpayer aggrieved by an order of the high court. When the high court refuses to certify the case to be fit for appeal to the SC under Section 261, a special leave petition (SLP) may be made to the SC against the decision of the high court. The appeal is required to be filed within 60 days of the date of the high court judgment.

In other cases, the period of limitation is 90 days from the date of judgment or order challenged in the SLP.

ii Administrative remedy

Revision of orders

The power of revision is an exceptional power, kept on the statute book to ensure that there is no miscarriage of justice on either side owing to certain technical requirements of the appeal procedure. As mentioned above, revisions are more related to exceptional power and are not as frequent as appeals.

Since the power of revision is meant to protect the Tax Department as well as taxpayers, two sections have been incorporated under the Act for dealing with the power of revision; these are explained below.

Section 263

As mentioned above, Section 263 of the Act gives the Commissioner of Income Tax the power to revise an order passed by the AO that he or she considers erroneous insofar as it is prejudicial to the interests of revenue. The Commissioner does not have the power to revise an order under Section 263 on matters that have been considered and decided in the appeal.

The revision of orders under Section 263 is confined only to orders passed by an AO and by the Deputy Commissioner of Income Tax performing the function of the AO. The Commissioner may pass suitable orders, including an order enhancing or modifying the assessment, or cancelling the assessment and directing a fresh assessment, or any other order to the detriment of the taxpayer.

Such order may be passed by the Commissioner of Income Tax within two years from the end of the financial year in which the order sought to be revised was passed. A taxpayer has the right to appeal to the ITAT against such an order. A writ can also be examined in appropriate cases.

Section 264

Taxpayers aggrieved by certain orders who feel that the remedy is of an administrative nature, or where an appeal is not possible, may invoke the provisions of Section 264 and seek revision of such orders by the Commissioner of Income Tax. An application for revision is required to be made by the taxpayer within one year from the date of communication of the order. Under Section 264, the Commissioner does not have the power to revise any order where an appeal against the order goes to the CIT(A) or to the ITAT.

The Commissioner may pass an order within a period of one year from the end of the financial year in which the application for revision is made.

However, this does not preclude the taxpayer from exercising his or her constitutional right to present a writ before the high court or to file an SLP before the SC.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Under the Act, penalties are imposed either by the departmental authorities or by the courts. However, the right to impose a penalty of an income tax officer does not come to an end when an appeal is filed against his or her assessment, although in certain cases he or she must obtain the prior approval of the Principal Commissioner.

The Act provides for two lines of penalties: civil penalties and criminal penalties. While the quasi-criminal proceedings intend to provide deterrence against the recurrence of default on the part of the taxpayer being assessed, and ensure compliance with the statutory requirements, there are certain offences triable by a criminal court. It can therefore be concluded that all penalties do not flow from an offence, as is commonly understood, but all offences lead to a penalty. Whereas a penalty flows from a disregard of strict statutory provisions, an offence is committed when there is mens rea and it is made the subject matter of an adjudication in a prosecution launched for that purpose in a criminal court.

Further, in its fight against tax evasion, the Indian tax regime concluded that the imposition of a monetary penalty alone was futile. The practice of evading tax for years and then getting away with it by a passing penalty fed the legislative thought to incorporate prosecution provisions into the existing law. The existing legislation also provides for the launching of prosecution proceedings for grave offences irrespective of the applicability of monetary penalties.

Furthermore, the recently enacted Black Money (Undisclosed Foreign Income and Assets) Act 2015 enhances civil and criminal liability in cases where income and assets have been illegitimately kept outside the purview of the Indian tax net.

Moreover, to rationalise and bring objectivity, certainty and clarity to the penalty provisions, with effect from 1 April 2016, the penal provisions pertaining to concealment of income or furnishing inaccurate of income have been replaced by provisions for under-reporting of income and misreporting of income.

In the ongoing exercise to curb black money tapped within the country, the Taxation Laws (2nd Amendment) Bill, 2016<sup>6</sup> proposes introducing Section 271AAC of the Act, which levies a penalty of 10 per cent on a tax payable at 75 per cent (tax 60 per cent plus a surcharge of 25 per cent) on undisclosed as well as unexplained income. Further, the Bill proposes amendments to Section 271AB of the Act to levy enhanced penalties on income unearthed during search proceedings.

i Remedies under the Act

Petitions and other applications

In rare circumstances, the taxpayer is given a right to petition the Commissioner of Income Tax or the Principal Commissioner of Income Tax for a reduction or waiver of certain penalties imposed. The primary requirements are that the taxpayer concerned should have cooperated with regard to the enquiry relating to the assessment of his or her income, should have paid or made arrangements for the payment of tax or interest payable, and should have made a full and true disclosure of his or her income and particulars relating thereto.

A similar relief is provided by way of an administrative circular to enable taxpayers who are liable to pay interest to petition for its waiver or reduction.

i Recovering overpaid tax

In cases where tax has been paid in excess by the taxpayer, such excess tax can be claimed as a refund in the income tax return filed for the relevant financial year. Under the relevant provisions of the Act, a taxpayer is entitled to receive interest calculated in the prescribed manner on the amount of refund due.

<sup>6</sup> The same has been approved by the Lower House of the Parliament and awaits the assent of the Upper House and the approval of the President.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

The Constitution clearly provides that no tax shall be imposed except that accorded by the authority of law. It is thus beyond the ambit of the administrative authorities to make a decision for the purposes of tax imposition in violation of the Constitutional Authority.

Where an administrative decision runs in contradiction to state policy, the courts have specifically held that the administrative policy cannot contradict the legislative policy.

Writ remedies

The high court may issue a writ of prohibition to stop the income tax authorities from acting in excess of their jurisdiction, or a writ of mandamus to compel the income tax authorities to perform their statutory duties or to refund moneys wrongfully recovered from the petitioner. The high court may also issue a writ of certiorari to quash quasi-judicial proceedings taken by the income tax authorities without jurisdiction or in excess of their jurisdiction, or to quash an order that is vitiated by an error apparent on the face of the record or that is passed in violation of the principles of natural justice, or to quash summons or orders issued that are patently illegal.

The basic principle of law is that a writ will not ordinarily be issued by the court where the impugned order, not patently erroneous, is made by an authority within the court's jurisdiction. However, where the defect of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the proceedings, or there is an abuse of power, a writ of prohibition or another appropriate writ or order can be issued despite the existence of an alternative remedy: for example, the right of appeal. The petitioner also has the option to file an SLP with the SC against the judgment of the high court under the relevant article of the Constitution.

iii Claimants

There is no group relief available since there are no tax consolidation rules in vogue. Every taxpayer pays tax in his or her own tax capacity. One of the notable exception is a situation where the tax assessment is made in a representative capacity.

In other words, only the person whose rights and interests are affected (i.e., the taxpayer) can make an appeal. In the case of an assessment of a representative for a foreign resident, the representative has the right to appeal on behalf of the foreign resident.

VI COSTS

Domestic tax law does not specify any mechanism for the recovery of costs. Costs are levied at the sole discretion of the courts. However, to avoid unnecessary litigation, the courts tend to levy high costs on matters involving frivolous issues.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Options available to a taxpayer under the alternate dispute mechanism are described below.

i Dispute Resolution Panel (DRP)

The DRP was commissioned by the government as a specialised panel operating for the resolution of transfer pricing disputes and for determination of tax liabilities of foreign companies in India.

Under the provisions of the Act relating to the functioning of the DRP, in the event that an AO proposes to make any variation to the returned income or loss of a taxpayer that is prejudicial to the interest of the taxpayer, a draft order is required to be provided by the AO to the taxpayer. Pursuant to the issuance of such draft order by the AO, the taxpayer has the choice to either opt for the standard litigation process as described above and approach the CIT(A), or to file an appeal before the DRP. If the taxpayer opts for the latter, the DRP will decide the validity of the adjustments made by the AO after considering the evidence furnished and objections raised by the taxpayer, to issue appropriate directions. The directions issued by the DRP are binding on the AO. Both the taxpayer and the Tax Department are permitted to appeal against the directions of the DRP before the ITAT. The entire process is time bound, and is required to be completed within a period of nine months from the date an application has been made to the DRP.

ii Income Tax Settlement Commission (Commission)

The Commission is a quasi-judicial body and its prime purpose is to settle tax liabilities in complicated cases, avoiding endless and prolonged litigation and consequential strain on the investigational resources of the Tax Department.

An application may only be filed with the Commission at the stage of pending assessment proceedings before an AO. The application may be filed in cases where the additional tax payable on the income disclosed in the application exceeds 5 million rupees in the case of assessment or reassessment proceedings under provisions relating to search or requisition, and 1 million rupees in other cases. The order passed by the Commission is conclusive as to the matter stated therein. However, it is possible to file a writ before the high court or an SLP with the SC against any order of the Commission. It is significant to note that, once an application for settlement has been admitted and allowed to be proceeded with, a subsequent application for settlement before the Commission cannot be preferred by the taxpayer.

iii Authority for Advance Ruling (AAR)

The Scheme of Advance Rulings has been introduced under the Act to provide a facility to ascertain the income tax liability of a non-resident, to plan income tax affairs well in advance, and to avoid lengthy and expensive litigation.

Under the AAR Scheme, a non-resident or certain categories of residents (who have undertaken or propose to undertake a transaction with a non-resident) can obtain binding rulings from the AAR on questions of law or fact arising out of any transaction or proposed transactions that are relevant for the determination of their potential income tax liability. A resident can use the 'advance ruling' facility in relation to tax liability arising out of one or more transactions valued at 1 billion rupees or more (in aggregate). It is important to note that an advance ruling is not permitted to be sought in the following cases:

- a where the question is already pending in the case of the non-resident applicant before any income tax authority, the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal or any court;
- b on questions relating to a determination of the fair market value of any moveable or immovable property; or
- c where the application relates to a transaction that is designed prima facie for avoidance of income tax.

The rulings of the AAR are binding on the Tax Department and the taxpayer. Although the rulings pronounced are not appealable in nature, this does not preclude the parties from exercising their constitutional right to present a writ before the high court. In a recent decision, the SC held that a constitutional challenge against an order of the AAR, which under income tax law is final and binding, would lie with the high court and not with the SC. The rulings of the AAR would remain in force as long as the transaction continues, and as long as there is no change in law or the facts on which the ruling was obtained. There is no limitation as to the number of assessment years for which the ruling shall be applicable, except where the law itself restricts the period of its applicability.

iv APAs

An APA is an agreement between a taxpayer and a taxing authority on an appropriate transfer pricing methodology for a set of transactions over a fixed period of time in the future. APAs offer better assurance on transfer pricing methods, and are conducive to providing certainty and unanimity of approach.

Under the provisions of the Act, the CBDT is empowered to enter into an APA with any person undertaking an international transaction. Such APAs shall include determination of the arm's-length price or specify the manner in which the arm's-length price shall be determined in relation to the international transaction. APAs are valid for such previous years as specified in the APA, which shall in no case exceed five consecutive previous years (i.e., within the period of four previous years preceding the first previous year covered in the APA). The regular APA shall be binding only on the person and the Commissioner of Income Tax (including income tax authorities subordinate to the Commissioner) in respect of the transaction in relation to which the APA has been entered into. The person entering into such APA is necessarily required to furnish a modified return within a period of three months from the end of the month in which the said APA was entered into in respect of the return of income already filed for a previous year to which the APA applies. It is important to note that India has signed its first bilateral APA with the US after eight months of continued efforts. To date, India has signed 111 APAs, of which only seven are bilateral APAs.<sup>7</sup>

v MAP

A MAP is a dispute resolution mechanism provided for resolving controversies arising out of the application of double tax avoidance agreements, and is a special procedure that is outside the scope and purview of domestic income tax regulations.

In general, Article 25 of the Model Tax Treaty Convention provides for said framework, and the OECD Convention is the one primarily used as the basis for all MAP proceedings.

The procedures relating to MAP proceedings are prescribed under Rule 44G to 44H of the Income Tax Rules 1962. To be admissible, the MAP application is required to first be presented to the competent authority of the taxpayer's state within three years of the first notification of an action (assessment notice or order, etc.). The resolution under a MAP is required to be communicated to the Chief Commissioner or Director General of Income Tax in writing, and the AO is required to affect the same within 90 days of receipt of such a resolution, if the taxpayer gives his or her acceptance to the resolution and withdraws all appeals pending on the issue that was the subject matter of adjudication under the MAP.

The MAP route can be pursued by taxpayers simultaneously with the domestic dispute resolution process. Further, it is pertinent to note that the MAP is applicable to a specific taxpayer. The details of resolutions reached are not available within the public domain and cannot be used as a precedent by other taxpayers. Within the Indian scenario, most MAP cases are with the United States, the United Kingdom, Japan and a few European countries.

In a positive development, India recently signed a framework agreement with the US under the MAP provision of the India–US double taxation avoidance agreement (DTAA). It has resolved about 100 transfer pricing disputes involving 50 billion rupees between the two countries, especially in the IT and ITeS sectors.<sup>8</sup>

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

The Indian legislature introduced the provisions of the general anti avoidance rule (GAAR) through the Finance Bill 2012. Implementation of the GAAR provisions has been deferred by two years and, as things stand, should be effective from 1 April 2017. The GAAR regulations are aimed at targeting complex or unusual tax avoidance arrangements that take advantage of inadvertent loopholes in the tax laws. The GAAR provisions provide discretionary powers to the revenue authorities when dealing with tax avoidance arrangements. These powers include:

- a* the authority to disregard the entities in a structure;
- b* the authority to reallocate income and expenditure between parties to the arrangement;
- c* the authority to alter the tax residence of such entities and the legal situs of assets involved; and
- d* the authority to treat debt as equity, and vice versa.

Moreover, although certain terms have been explicitly defined under the GAAR provisions, significant terms such as commercial substance and bona fide purpose have not been defined, leaving adequate room for subjective interpretation by the tax authorities and taxpayers. The GAAR provisions are currently drafted in a manner so that they do have an overriding effect on the provisions of tax treaties. The GAAR provisions shall not apply to any income earned by any person from transfer of investments made by such person before 30 August 2010.

According to the GAAR provisions, an AO shall make a reference to the Principal Commissioner of Income Tax for invoking the GAAR, and, on receipt of said reference, the Commissioner shall hear the taxpayer. If the Commissioner of Income Tax is not satisfied by the reply of the taxpayer and is of the opinion that the GAAR provisions are to be invoked, the matter shall be referred to an approving panel. After providing the taxpayer with an opportunity to be heard, the approving panel is required to dispose of the reference within six months after any necessary examination and inquiry. The disposal entails declaring an arrangement to be either permissible or impermissible. The directions of the approving panel are binding on the AO. However, the taxpayer can appeal against a GAAR order directly to the ITAT for quick resolution of the dispute.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

The provisions of the Act effectively make a tax treaty part of domestic tax law that will override the provisions of domestic law to the extent they are beneficial to the taxpayer.

India is not a signatory to the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, or the OECD Model Convention on Income and on Capital, but is a member of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between developed and developing countries. However, the courts have acknowledged and given due credit to principles enshrined in the Vienna Convention, and have also acknowledged the persuasive value of the OECD Model Convention.

Recently, India amended its DTAA's with, inter alia, Cyprus, Korea, Japan and Mauritius. Provisions pertaining to source-based taxation, limitation of benefits and effective exchange of information articles have been appropriately revised or inserted vide such amendments to prevent treaty shopping and to strengthen the exchange mechanism.

Recently, through a notification, the CBDT amended the Income tax Rules, 1962 to provide for a separate segment in the Foreign Tax Credit Rules, 2016. The Rules provide clarity on the mechanism for obtaining a foreign tax credit in India on foreign taxes paid. The intended beneficiaries of the Rules are Indian residents that earn foreign-sourced income.

X FOCUS AREAS

The peril of black money both within and outside India has been in the spotlight during the past few years, and has captured public sentiment and political attention. The government has initiated several schemes to reinforce its commitment towards tackling the menace of the parallel economy and its attempt to bring money of that nature back into India. For instance, through the Finance Act, 2015, the Black Money (Undisclosed Foreign Income and Assets) And Imposition of Tax Act, 2015 was introduced to bring back to India income and assets sited overseas. Similarly, through the Finance Act, 2016 the government introduced the income disclosure scheme, 2016 as a one-time window to declare domestic undisclosed and unreported income and assets for any previous year prior to 1 April 2016 by making a down payment of 45 per cent of the undisclosed income to avoid prosecution provisions.<sup>9</sup>

Amid the above-mentioned initiatives, the government introduced the bold step of demonetising high-value-denominated currency notes to tackle issues including black money, money laundering and terrorism. Following such declaration, the government again unveiled another round of the income disclosure scheme, 2016, focusing on high-value deposits or cash that, if unexplained, can be voluntarily offered to be taxed at a rate of 50 per cent of the unexplained cash, with a remaining 25 per cent being deposited with government-approved banks for a minimum lock-in period of four years and bearing no interest.

All these initiatives evidence the fact that the present government, led by Narendra Modi, is in no mood to allow the offenders responsible for the generation of a parallel economy to escape punishment, and that it shall leave no stone unturned to ensure that the parallel economy no longer exists. The same is witnessed by the authorities having seized an all-time high-value amount of cash and jewellery, while 33.6 billion rupees of unpaid taxes have been surrendered this year as part of its enhanced crackdown against black money holders in India.<sup>10</sup>

Further, the 2016 dispute resolution scheme provides a window for cases wherein tax arrears in respect of which an appeal is pending before the first appellate authority as on 29 February 2016, or, in the case of any specified tax (e.g., tax determined upon validation or a retrospective amendment of provisions of the Act) in respect of which an appeal, writ or any other proceedings are pending, taxpayers can make a tax payment and get relief in terms of the interest and penalties imposed on them. Around 300,000 tax cases are pending at the first appellate level with a disputed amount of tax of about 55 million rupees.<sup>11</sup>

Regarding controversial cases such as Vodafone, Shell, Cairn and Nokia, the government has been served with arbitration notices from the said taxpayers by their invoking of bilateral investment treaties or bilateral investment promotion and protection agreements with India for the resolution of tax disputes. The government's intent behind the introduction of the dispute resolution scheme, 2016 was to resolve such pending matters. The Revenue Secretary, Mr Adhia, has admitted that the response to the scheme is not as expected.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

A recent World Bank survey suggests that the parallel economy in India accounts for around 25 per cent of its GDP. Moreover, a study by Credit Suisse estimates the wealth-to-GDP ratio in India at around two. Assuming that wealth creation is similar for both declared and undeclared income, this would suggest that black wealth creation is similar for both declared and undeclared income, and accordingly black wealth accounts for about 50 per cent of India's GDP.<sup>12</sup>

Following the withdrawal of legal tender notes effective from 9 November 2016, close to 20 billion rupees have been admitted to be the undisclosed income by taxpayers.<sup>13</sup>

The government has also hinted at a reduction in taxation rates, as demonetisation has resulted in more digital payments, leading to a widening of the tax base.

As suggested above, the government is currently making all possible endeavours to ensure India develops into a cashless economy and is simultaneously perceived as an investor-friendly jurisdiction. A shift to a cashless economy is desirable as the same makes it difficult for tax evaders to hide their income, a substantial benefit in a country that is fiscally constrained.

The government is working on a broad strategic plan to integrate the national economy. From the date that the current government took control, its focus has been on formalising the unorganised and informal sector. Direct benefits transfers, the Aadhar national identity cards and voluntary income disclosure schemes are just some of the steps taken in this direction.

Additionally, the government has formed a special investigation team on black money, and has renegotiated the controversial DTAA's with Cyprus and Mauritius to curb the avoidance of taxes and the routing of illegal funds through shell companies incorporated in these 'tax havens'.

Harsher policies are expected to penalise defaulters and to eliminate 'black money' after the 31 December 2016 deadline.

In addition to initiating such considerable acts, the government has also taken note of the need to ensure ease of doing business by providing a non-adversarial and conducive tax environment wherein emphasis has been laid on the Tax Department to adhere to certain guidelines in an effort to improve the overall capacity and to improve the quality of assessments.

The tax authorities have tried to bring clarity to disputed tax positions to settle these and put to rest all the surrounding interpretation controversies. To illustrate, regarding the characterisation of income from transactions in listed shares and securities, the CBDT issued a clarificatory circular<sup>14</sup> with a view to reduce litigation and maintain consistency in approach in assessments. The circular instructs that income arising from transfer of listed shares and securities that are held for more than 12 months would be taxed under the head 'capital gain' unless the taxpayer itself treats these as its stock-in-trade and transfer thereof as its business income.<sup>15</sup>

With regard to the increasing number of transfer pricing disputes, the authorities issued guidelines<sup>16</sup> setting out circumstances for making reference to transfer pricing officers, and that AOs, despite having power to determine the arm's-length pricing, should not determine it.

The above initiatives aim to make doing business in India easy, reduce tax litigation, cut tax arrears and make the administration accountable, as well as introduce stricter penal and prosecution provisions for tax offenders.

Amid all the above unprecedented and extraordinary events and initiations, the authorities have somewhat brushed aside their commitments with regard to taxation changes that were proposed to start from the next financial year (i.e., 2017–18) or be implemented in the current year (i.e., 2016–17). For instance, definitive guidelines are yet to be released on the place of effective management and the GAAR. Moreover, new accounting standards were introduced in this financial year to be applicable to companies with net worth above 5 billion rupees and listed companies. However, guidance and final rules on their implementation are still pending. Similarly, guidance is also awaited on country-by-country reporting under India's commitment towards the OECD's base erosion and profit shifting initiatives.

The government's firm stand on tackling black money and its continued efforts to make India a tax-friendly jurisdiction are much appreciated and laudable. With limited resources at hand, issues affecting tax disputes are being tackled one at a time.

INDONESIA

I INTRODUCTION

Tax disputes in Indonesia involve local government administration by the revenue authority of the province, regency and central government taxes administered by the Ministry of Finance through the Directorate General of Taxes (DGT) and the Directorate General of Customs and Excise (DGCE). Procedures for dispute resolution are governed by the Local Tax Law at the administrative level for local government taxes; by the Customs Law and the Excises Law for taxes administered by the DGCE; and by the General Rules of Taxation Law (GRT Law) for taxes administered by the DGT.

The number of tax disputes filed for resolution in the Tax Court in 2015 amounted to 12,486 applications, increased by 15 per cent compared with the number of tax dispute applications in 2014.<sup>2</sup> The number of Tax Court decisions issued in 2015 was 9,032, an increase of 2.1 per cent compared with 2014. The large number of tax disputes filed for resolution in the Tax Court is the result of enforcement of official assessments where an assessment result is deemed incorrect by a taxpayer. In this regard, 44.83 per cent of Tax Court decisions were fully in favour of taxpayers, 13.47 per cent were partially in favour of taxpayers and 25.4 per cent denied requests from taxpayers.

Out of a total of 2,755 cases, 1,352 tax disputes were carried over to civil review requests at the Supreme Court in 2015.<sup>3</sup> Typically, the increase in the number of official assessments has been caused by a high tax revenue target. In 2017, the budget tax revenue target was 1.49 quadrillion rupiah, which is 35.5 per cent higher than 2016's realised tax revenue of 1.1 quadrillion rupiah. The realised tax revenue, however, includes receipts from Indonesia's tax amnesty; without it, the tax revenue would only be 0.99 quadrillion rupiah.

In addition to the receipts from Indonesia's tax amnesty policy, a database of taxpayers and their assets profiles would provide DGT with information for the purpose of monitoring and engaging taxpayers in better tax compliance.

After being passed by the Indonesian House of Representatives on 1 July 2016, President Joko Widodo approved the Tax Amnesty Law. The Tax Amnesty Law provides facilities for taxpayers that include the elimination of tax payable, the discontinuance of tax audits and preliminary tax audits, and the indemnification from tax administrative penalties and taxation criminal sanctions, for the tax period up to 31 December 2015. To benefit from these provisions, taxpayers must submit a tax amnesty application and pay an amount, called 'ransom money', no later than 31 March 2017. The ransom money is computed by multiplying the ransom money rate with previously unreported assets (net worth assets), according with the periods of application submission, as follows:

- a* 2 per cent (1 July 2016 to 30 September 2016), 3 per cent (1 October 2016 to 31 December 2016) and 5 per cent (1 January 2017 to 31 March 2017) on unreported assets located in Indonesia, or located offshore with the requirement of being repatriated into Indonesia;
- b* 4 per cent (1 July 2016 to 30 September 2016), 6 per cent (1 October 2016 to 31 December 2016) and 10 per cent (1 January 2017 to 31 March 2017) on unreported assets located offshore without being repatriated into Indonesia; and
- c* for small enterprises with turnover of no more than 4.8 billion rupiahs for tax year 2015, the rates are 0.5 per cent for unreported assets of no more than 10 billion rupiahs and 2 per cent for unreported assets more than 10 billion rupiahs. The rate is applicable from 1 July 2016 to 31 March 2017.

Official assessments by the DGT are usually performed by tax audit. The quality of the tax audit is determined by its key indicators: high-tax revenue contribution and refund discrepancy. Official assessments by the DGT are required whenever a taxpayer requests a refund. In February 2016, the DGT issued DGT Circular Letter No. SE-06/PJ/2016, regarding its tax audit policy. The Circular Letter provides guidelines for carrying out tax audits whose objectives are monitoring tax audit procedural compliance, increased audit coverage ratio and increased tax revenues resulting from tax audits.

The Circular Letter also provides selection criteria for tax audit, which include:

- a* transfer pricing;
- b* change-of-book periods;
- c* mergers and acquisitions;
- d* business restructuring;
- e* advance refunds;
- f* tax returns requesting refunds;
- g* tax returns carrying forward advance taxes; and
- h* fixed assets revaluations.

However, the tax audit policy has been held up by the issuance of DGT Instruction Letter No. INS-03/PJ/2016 on August 2016, which requires all DGT officers to promote the Tax Amnesty Law upon carrying out tax audits. The instructions given by the Director General are, inter alia:

- a* to not issue or to cancel audit instruction letters (that have not been delivered to taxpayers) until 31 March 2017, except for those concerning tax refund audit criteria or regarding tax audits related to the administrative aspects of taxpayers' rights;

- b* to inform taxpayers to whom tax audit instruction letters have been delivered about the tax amnesty policy;
- c* in the event that a taxpayer opts to implement the tax amnesty policy, an ongoing tax audit shall be stopped and shall not be subject to the issuance of any assessment; and
- d* tax audits that are stopped due to the implementation of the tax amnesty policy shall be considered as tax auditors 100 per cent conversion performance indicator.

Below, we provide a summary of tax dispute resolution procedures under the Indonesian tax system, focusing on the central government taxes administered by the DGT and customs duties administered by the DGCE. Since the tax dispute statistics for excise and local government taxes are relatively small, we do not provide explanations for them.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

i Taxes administered by the DGCE

Generally, tax disputes administered by the DGCE begin with an assessment of import and export declarations, customs facilities requests or renewals, and unloading activities declared in a certain area. The DGCE assesses these, and can issue:

- a* a customs official assessment resulting in an import duties tariff or value assessment, and other items;
- b* a customs audit resulting in an assessment other than that of a customs tariff or value, and penalties; or
- c* a customs audit resulting in a customs tariff and duties assessment.

Assessments resulting from (a) and (b) could be opposed by filing an objection letter to the DGCE within 60 days of the assessment date. This generally requires bonds equivalent to the amount of taxes or duties assessed to be provided. The DGCE will make a decision regarding a taxpayer's objection within 60 days after receipt of the objection letter. If the DGCE has not made a decision regarding the objection within 60 days, the taxpayer's objection will be deemed granted, and the bonds will be released back. A customs tariff and duties reassessment and objection decision can only be appealed to the Tax Court within 60 days after the date of the assessment or objection decision. When filing an appeal to the Tax Court regarding a DGCE objection or customs tariff and duties assessment (resulting from an audit), the taxpayer is required to pay the full amount of assessed taxes.

ii Taxes administered by the DGT

Taxes administered by the DGT include income tax (corporate income tax and individual income tax), VAT and sales tax on luxury goods. Pursuant to Article 3, Paragraph 1 of the GRT Law, the self-assessment system must be completed by taxpayers filing tax returns and paying taxes due without reliance on DGT assessments. DGT assessments subject to dispute with taxpayers can be classified as follows: a tax collection notification letter; a tax assessment letter (and withholding tax receipt); and other tax letters (i.e., private letters).

Generally, tax collection notification letters and tax assessment letters are the result of tax audits or tax verification. Tax verification, although not standardised in the GRT Law, is included in Government Regulation (GR) No. 74 (2011). Other tax letters issued by the DGT could be subject to dispute depending on the content of such letters. Tax collection notification letters and tax assessment letters issued based on tax verification will only cover a certain area (e.g., revenue) and will not cover all areas of a particular type of tax. Although tax collection notification letters or tax assessment letters have been issued based on tax verification, the DGT can still audit taxpayers and issue such assessments again. However, some articles, including those concerning tax verification under GR No. 74 (2011), have been invalidated by Supreme Court Decision No. 73 P/HUM/2013 concerning a judicial review requested by the Indonesian Chamber of Commerce.

A tax audit is generally initiated by a taxpayer's request for a refund. Almost every tax refund request is followed by a tax audit. The tax refund audit timeline is 12 months from the date the tax return requesting a refund is filed. A taxpayer's refund request is deemed granted if the DGT fails to issue a tax assessment letter within 12 months. In a non-tax refund audit, while there is a procedural timeline, an audit exceeding such timeline cannot be invalidated. A taxpayer who meets certain criteria can receive an advance tax refund, but the DGT still has the authority to audit and issue an assessment. In the case of a tax assessment letter issued in relation to the previously administered advance tax refund, if the tax assessment letter issued shows that the taxpayer has been underpaid, the unpaid tax is added with a penalty of 100 per cent. The DGT can also audit a taxpayer based on selective criteria, according to DGT audit policy, for a certain year. The DGT has only recently focused on auditing certain transactions such as related-party transactions and corporate restructurings, and transactions in certain areas of industry, such as agriculture and mining.

During an audit, a tax audit officer will perform direct and indirect tests as governed by DGT audit procedures. In some cases, a tax audit officer will perform indirect testing such as reconciliation of tax accounts with financial accounts on a tax adjustment basis. However, tax laws require that tax adjustments by the tax officer be based on valid and competent evidence, which in our view does not include the results of indirect testing. Tax Court judges, confirmed by Supreme Court judges, also hold this view. Thus, reconciliation of tax accounts with financial accounts would not qualify as evidence.<sup>4</sup>

Pursuant to Article 12, Paragraph 3 of the GRT Law, the DGT can only issue a tax assessment letter if it has evidence that the tax disclosed in the tax return is incorrect. This sets the foundation that the burden of proof under the Indonesian tax system lies with the tax authority. The notion that the burden of proof lies with the DGT has been confirmed in a civil review decision by Supreme Court judges.<sup>5</sup> However, this would not be the case for a taxpayer who does not maintain proper accounts and records. In such case, the DGT can issue a tax assessment letter with an underpaid amount, and add a 50 per cent penalty in the case of income tax, and a 100 per cent penalty in the case of withholding tax, VAT and sales tax on luxury goods.

During a tax audit or tax objection, data and document submission should be managed with great caution. The DGT could deny a taxpayer's objection if the data or documents requested are not submitted during the tax audit pursuant to Article 26A, Paragraph 4 of the GRT Law. The DGT could also request the Tax Court to omit the data or documents submitted in the Tax Court that were not submitted previously during a tax audit and tax objection (other than those in the possession of a third-party), and this has been confirmed by Supreme Court judges.<sup>6</sup> In another Supreme Court decision, this would not be the case if the data or documents, although not submitted during a tax audit, are submitted during a tax objection. In such case, they would still qualify as evidence.<sup>7</sup>

Prior to a tax audit, the taxpayer can amend his or her tax return resulting in overpaid tax or tax loss within three years of the end of the tax period. An amendment resulting in underpaid tax has no time limit, but is subject to a 2 per cent penalty for each month. During a tax audit, taxpayers can voluntarily disclose errors in their tax returns by applying Article 8, Paragraph 4 of the GRT Law, and pay the resulting unpaid tax and a 50 per cent penalty of the unpaid tax prior to submission of a disclosure. However, the DGT would review such disclosure before deciding to accept or deny it.

Prior to the final findings of a tax audit, taxpayers can request a quality assurance review at the higher level of the DGT. The basis for requesting a quality assurance review is if there is a violation of the law and its application by a tax audit officer. The quality assurance team will issue a legally binding decision as a basis for the final findings of a tax audit and its tax assessment letter.

Following a DGT tax collection notification letter, a taxpayer can file for administrative remedies pursuant to Article 36 of the GRT Law as follows: a penalty reduction or write-off (Article 36, Paragraph 1a of the GRT Law); a reduction or cancellation of the tax collection notification letter (Article 36, Paragraph 1c of the GRT Law); and a cancellation of a tax collection notification letter resulting from a tax audit that was completed without the taxpayer receiving temporary audit findings and a final audit closing conference letter (Article 36, Paragraph 1d of the GRT Law).

Following a DGT tax assessment letter, the taxpayer can file administrative remedies pursuant to Article 36 of the GRT Law as follows: a penalty reduction or write-off (Article 36, Paragraph 1a of the GRT Law); a reduction or cancellation of a tax collection notification letter (Article 36, Paragraph 1b of the GRT Law); and a cancellation of a tax assessment letter resulting from a tax audit that was completed without the taxpayer receiving temporary audit findings and a final audit closing conference letter (Article 36, Paragraph 1d of the GRT Law).

Administrative remedies set out in Article 36, Paragraph 1 of the GRT Law are generally resolved within the following timelines:

- a* an indefinite timeline if filing an application for the first time;
- b* a DGT decision is made within six months of receipt of the first application;
- c* a second application is filed within three months of the DGT decision on the first application; and
- d* a DGT decision is made within six months of receipt of the second application.

A taxpayer's first or second application is deemed granted if the DGT fails to issue a decision letter within six months of the application being received.

Upon a DGT decision on the first or second taxpayer application of Article 36, Paragraph 1 of the GRT Law, the taxpayer can file a lawsuit to the Tax Court appealing the decision. The lawsuit should be made within 30 days of the decision.

6 See Supreme Court Decision No. 1026/B/PK/PJK/2014.

7 See Supreme Court Decision No. 877/B/PK/PJK/2013.

Further to the above, following a DGT tax assessment letter and withholding tax receipt, a taxpayer can request administrative remedies pursuant to Article 25 of the GRT Law by filing an objection to the DGT within three months of the tax assessment letter being sent or the date of the withholding tax receipt. The three-month timeline is not applicable when the taxpayer is able to demonstrate a force majeure situation. Upon filing a tax objection, the administrative remedies set out in Article 36, Paragraph 1 of the GRT Law will be denied as long as the two remedies are closely related. Pursuant to Article 26, Paragraph 4 of the GRT Law, the burden of proof still lies with the DGT, unless the tax assessment was issued based on the grounds of insufficient accounts or records.

The taxpayer's objection will be deemed granted if the DGT fails to issue an objection decision letter within 12 months of the objection letter being received. Upon the DGT objection decision, the taxpayer can file an appeal to the Tax Court. The DGT objection decision could be fully accepted, partially accepted or denied, or could increase the amount of taxes.

Regarding other letters issued by the DGT, such as tax audit instruction letters or private letters, such letters can be resolved by filing a lawsuit with the Tax Court. Generally, the Tax Court will consider the case and decide whether such letter is subject to resolution in the Tax Court provided that certain criteria are met, especially if such letter has resulted in specific tax consequences for the taxpayer.<sup>8</sup> The lawsuit for such letter should be filed within 30 days of the date the letter was sent.

Law No. 30 Year 2014 regarding Governmental Administration (GA Law) provides rules and guidance for governmental bodies when performing their duties. The GA Law is also to be applied by the administrative courts, which system the Tax Court is part of. Administrative products of governmental bodies are defined broadly under the GA Law, which provides more criteria for administrative products. The grounds to challenge administrative products under the GA Law include abuse of power, procedural error and principles of good governance (i.e., the principle of legitimate expectation). However, such grounds have not been applied significantly by Tax Court judges in precedent cases. Nonetheless, the GA Law still arguably provides grounds for the Tax Court in deciding tax disputes both under appeal or lawsuit.

In 2015, the Supreme Court issued Supreme Court Regulation No. 5 of 2015, which allows persons to file a 'request for decision' to the administrative court with regard to their rights to receive an administrative decision from a government body. The ground to file such 'request for decision' is generally when a person's prior request to a government body is deemed granted, but the government body has not issued an executorial decision. With regards to taxation, it has happened that a taxpayer's request for interest has been granted ultimately by the Tax Court, but the DGT has not issued any executorial decision allowing the interest to be paid to the taxpayer.

A seizure letter as a result of tax collection forces a taxpayer to surrender an amount of money or assets to settle the taxes owed. The taxpayer can file a lawsuit on such seizure letter within 14 days of the date of the letter in the following situations: where the taxpayer has filed for dispute resolution on the taxes due and is in financial distress, and thus requests that any tax collection, including seizure, be halted until the relevant dispute resolution has been issued; or where the process of seizure is procedurally flawed, which could result in the reprocessing of the seizure.

Unpaid taxes or penalties set out in a tax collection notification letter should be followed by active tax collection efforts, including those that end in a seizure letter. On the other hand, the collection of unpaid taxes and penalties set out in a tax assessment letter should be postponed pursuant to the taxpayer's objection to the DGT. However, such unpaid taxes and penalties are subject to a 50 per cent penalty of the unpaid amount if the DGT issues a decision partially granting or denying the taxpayer's objection. The 50 per cent penalty is not imposed if the taxpayer paid the unpaid taxes and penalties prior to objection, or if the taxpayer has filed a tax appeal to the Tax Court. The 2 per cent interest each month imposed on an unpaid tax assessment letter will not be imposed if the taxpayer files an objection to the DGT.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

Tax dispute resolution at the judicial level is first settled in the Tax Court. If the taxpayer or tax authority wants to challenge the Tax Court decision, either or both can file a civil review to the Supreme Court. The Tax Court will only be able to accept an application for a lawsuit or an appeal from the taxpayer.

The Tax Court is part of the administrative court system under the judicial power of the Supreme Court, pursuant to Article 27 Paragraph 1 of the Judicial Authority Law. It is located in Jakarta, and uses several cities as its place of trials or hearings, including Jakarta, Yogyakarta and Surabaya. For the purpose of developing its judiciary techniques, the Tax Court is managed by the Supreme Court, while for the purpose of developing its organisation, administration and finance, it is managed by the Ministry of Finance. Although it is managed by two different institutions, Tax Court judges are independent in resolving tax disputes (Article 5 of the Tax Court Law).

Full Tax Court decisions are not provided by the Tax Court. Instead, the Tax Court provides a summary of a Court decision, which is available on its website<sup>9</sup> and on the Supreme Court website.<sup>10</sup> The Secretary of the Tax Court has said that full tax court decisions were not allowed due to the instruction of the Tax Court Chief.<sup>11</sup> Contrary to that, a full Supreme Court decision, even one concerning a tax dispute, is provided by the Supreme Court on its website.<sup>12</sup>

Pursuant to Article 81 of the Tax Court Law, the Tax Court is required to issue a decision on an appeal within 15 months (12 months plus a three-month extension) and on a lawsuit within nine months (six months plus a three-month extension). Tax Court decisions that exceed such timeline will not cause the decision to be invalidated by the Supreme Court.<sup>13</sup>

In a lawsuit, a taxpayer is not required to pay unpaid taxes as a procedural requirement, while in an appeal, a taxpayer is required to pay at least 50 per cent of unpaid taxes (Article 36, Paragraph 4 of the Tax Court Law). When an appeal is made on decisions or assessments by the DGCE, by law the unpaid taxes must be paid in full. However, the Supreme Court has issued two decisions ruling that the requirement to pay unpaid taxes for appeals on DGCE decisions or assessments is omitted and not required based on jurisprudence or precedent.<sup>14</sup> For appeals made on objection decisions by the DGT, the unpaid taxes in dispute are not required to be paid, as the unpaid taxes are deemed postponed until one month after the Tax Court decision is made (Article 27, Paragraph 5a of the GRT Law). Prior to an appeal on the DGT objection decision, a taxpayer is only required to pay the amount of unpaid taxes agreed during the tax audit.

If the Tax Court decision is considered unfavourable to either taxpayer or tax authority, either or both could file a civil review application to the Supreme Court. The grounds for such application are (under Article 91 of the Tax Court Law):

- a* the tax court decision was made based on deception by the counterparty, which was only known after the case was decided, or the Tax Court decision was made based on unauthentic evidence adjudicated by a civil court;
- b* there is new written evidence that is decisive and that, if known during the court proceedings, will result in a different decision;
- c* an ultra petita decision;
- d* part of the requisition has been decided without consideration; and
- e* the Tax Court decision clearly violated the applicable laws.

A civil review application is required to be filed within three months from:

- a* the discovery of a deception or a civil court decision adjudicating that there is an unauthentic evidence (Article 91a of the Tax Court Law);
- b* the discovery of new evidence of which the date of discovery must be made under oath and authorised by a competent authority (Article 91b of the Tax Court Law); or
- c* the Tax Court decision being sent (Article 91c–e of the Tax Court Law).

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

In addition to the use of tax audits for official assessment, tax audits can be used to collect preliminary evidence where a tax crime is suspected. Where a tax audit has been completed, provided that a tax crime investigation has not commenced, a taxpayer could voluntarily disclose an inaccuracy and pay any underpaid tax along with a penalty of 150 per cent of the underpaid tax. Thus, a tax crime investigation will not commence provided that the DGT accepts such voluntary disclosure.

The punishments for a tax crime would be imprisonment and a financial penalty. Generally, the individual taxpayer or the director of a company and his or her accomplices will be held accountable for the tax crime, and only the person or company charged with the tax crime will bear the punishment. Not reporting a tax return or reporting an incorrect or incomplete tax return, or attaching incorrect information in the tax return, are generally considered as tax crimes. There is a difference between ‘intention’ and ‘gross neglect’: in the latter, if conducted by a taxpayer for the first time, the taxpayer may avoid imprisonment if he or she pays the monetary penalties. There are further, although not significant, differences between intention and gross neglect.

In the case of a Tax Court decision that denies or partially grants an appeal, the taxpayer is subject to a penalty of 100 per cent of the amount of unpaid tax less the tax paid prior to filing an objection to the DGT. Payments made after filing an objection to the DGT will not be considered in the penalty computation. On the other hand, if a Tax Court decision partially or fully grants an appeal on an underpaid objection decision, the taxpayer cannot request interest on the taxes paid prior to the objection or appeal. Interest of 2 per cent for a 24-month maximum period for taxpayers from the DGT could be available in the event that an overpaid tax in a tax return was not granted for refund during a tax audit, yet was granted for refund during a tax objection or appeal. If the DGT is late in issuing a tax refund instruction letter, the taxpayer could also request interest of 2 per cent from the time limit of the issuance of the tax refund instruction letter to the actual date of issuance of the tax refund instruction letter.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

As explained in Section II, supra, a taxpayer can request a tax refund by stating such request in his or her tax return.

Where a foreign company's income tax exceeding its tax limitation in a tax treaty is being withheld, such overpayment could be recovered through the application by an Indonesian taxpayer to the DGT.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

The principle of equal treatment is applicable as a ground in resolving tax disputes, as explained in Article 31a of the Income Tax Law, Article 16b of the Law on VAT and Sales Tax on Luxury Goods, and Article 28d Paragraph 1 of the Indonesian Constitution. To confirm this, a Supreme Court decision upheld a Tax Court decision allowing a taxpayer's appeal against the DGT objection decision on the ground of the principle of equal treatment.<sup>15</sup>

VI COSTS

The Tax Court does not have the power to adjudicate costs related to legal proceedings to a taxpayer or the tax authorities. However, the Supreme Court can adjudicate the cost of a civil review application in an amount of 2.5 million rupiah, to be borne by the losing party.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Indonesian tax laws do not provide for arbitration or mediation for tax disputes between taxpayers and the tax authorities in Indonesia. The same applies regarding advance rulings. However, a taxpayer could request a letter to confirm certain tax rules or the tax treatment of a transaction. The DGT is not bound to respond to such a confirmation letter. If the DGT responds, a private letter will be issued and would be legally binding under the principles of legitimate expectation. In many cases, the DGT can also arrange a consultative hearing with the taxpayer, and provide a non-written explanation that is not legally binding.

During a tax dispute resolution at the administrative or court level, both the taxpayer and the tax authority can agree on something previously disputed without mediation.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Indonesian tax laws do not have a general anti-avoidance rule with a straightforward meaning. There has been discussion by scholars that the principle of substance over form implicitly embodied in Article 4, Paragraph 1 of the Income Tax Law, and in the Indonesian accepted accounting standards, is the Indonesian general anti-avoidance rule. The principle of equal treatment, explained in Article 31a of the Income Tax Law and Article 16b of the Law on VAT and Sales Tax on Luxury Goods, is also argued to be the Indonesian general anti-avoidance rule.

The Indonesian Income Tax Law also embodies specific anti-avoidance rules:

- a* thin capitalisation rules (Article 18, Paragraph 1 and Article 18, Paragraph 3 of the Income Tax Law). In 1984, the Ministry of Finance issued Ministry of Finance Decree No. KMK 1002/KMK.04/1984, prescribing a 3:1 debt-to-equity ratio to limit interest deductions by companies. In 1985, this Decree was revoked with retroactive effect from 1984. Only in September 2015, the Ministry of Finance again issued a debt-to-equity ratio for denying interest deductions by companies. According to Ministry of Finance Decree No. PMK-169/PMK.101/2015, in effect since January 2016, the applicable debt-to-equity ratio is 4:1;
- b* transfer pricing rules (Article 18, Paragraph 3 of the Income Tax Law) states that related-party transactions should be based on an arm's-length principle by applying transfer pricing methods, namely comparable uncontrolled price, cost-plus, resale price, profit split and the transactional net margin methods. Indonesia's first transfer pricing guideline was DGT Decree No. KEP-01/PJ.7/1993, which was an audit guideline for tax officers and which was subsequently replaced by DGT Regulation No. PER-43/PJ/2010 on 6 September 2010. This latter Regulation still adopted the hierarchy of methods principle, but was further amended by DGT Regulation PER-32/PJ/2011, which adopted the most appropriate method principle;
- c* controlled foreign corporation rules (Article 18, Paragraph 2 of the Income Tax Law, Ministry of Finance Regulation No. PMK-256/PMK.03/2008 and DGT Regulation No. PER-59/PJ/2010). Profits of offshore companies owned by one or more Indonesian taxpayers can be deemed as dividends received by the Indonesian taxpayer;
- d* indirect transfer of shares (Article 18, Paragraph 3c of the Income Tax Law and Ministry of Finance Decree No. PMK-258/PMK.03/2008); and
- e* limitations on the benefits of tax treaties (DGT Regulation Nos. 61/2009, 62/2009, 24/2010 and 25/2010). The rules specify criteria and forms to be filed by foreign taxpayers to be entitled to a treaty benefit. One questionnaire form includes a checklist concerning beneficial ownership.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

Indonesia has concluded and ratified tax treaties with 67 countries (including with the governments of Lao and Armenia, ratified in 2016), which prevail over Indonesian domestic tax laws according to Article 32A of the Income Tax Law. In 2014, Indonesia ratified the Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters, and treaties on exchange of information with the governments of Bermuda, the Isle of Man, Guernsey and Jersey. Although Indonesia is not a party to the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, it has a law concerning international treaties that governs that international treaties shall be applied in good faith. This is similar to what is directed in the Vienna Convention. In many Tax Court cases concerning limitations on the benefits of tax treaties, the Tax Court has unanimously held that the domestic rules of limitation on the benefits of tax treaties shall not be applied in excess of that which has been agreed in such tax treaties.

With respect to policy making, the government is trying to renegotiate several tax treaties that are not beneficial to Indonesia, and to promote automatic exchange of information in tax treaties. In November 2011, Indonesia signed the Multilateral Convention on Mutual Administrative Matters, which was ratified through Presidential Decree No. 159/2014. The Minister of Finance subsequently signed the Multilateral Competent Authority Agreement on 3 June 2015 and committed to automatic exchange of information by 2018;<sup>16</sup> however, it is expected that Indonesia will expedite from September 2017.<sup>17</sup>

X AREAS OF FOCUS

As previously mentioned, tax disputes mostly arise from audits of tax returns with refund requests. A refund discrepancy is the primary key performance indicator in a tax audit; thus, the tax refund will most likely be reduced. Transfer pricing is still the main focus of tax audits, followed by the mining and agricultural industry, which contributes significantly to the tax revenue. Corporate restructurings involving transfer of intangible properties and workforce, both domestic and international, are also targeted.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

The government is planning to amend the Law on General Rules of Taxation and to include in the national legislation a 2015–2019 programme to promote lower compliance costs, and promote efficient and effective tax administration through, inter alia, electronic self-assessment mechanisms and the payment of taxes in currencies other than the Indonesian rupiah.<sup>18</sup> In addition, the government plans to implement technical measures to increase the taxation database with data from other regulatory and governmental bodies. In addition, following the arrest of a senior tax officer by the Corruption Eradication Commission, the Ministry of Finance has established two teams that will oversee and direct the reform of Indonesia's taxation and customs system.<sup>19</sup>

The tax revenue collection policy for 2017 will be focused on intensified law enforcement and the continued implementation of the tax amnesty programme.<sup>20</sup> The tax revenue target for 2017 is 1.49 quadrillion rupiah (a decrease of 2.8 per cent compared to the 2016 revised budget). In its National Medium-Term Development Plan (2015–2019) the government aims to increase the tax ratio gradually, from 13.2 per cent in 2015 to 16 per cent in 2019 (including 1 per cent from local taxes), which is to be followed by:

- a* a reform of the revenue authority, establishing it directly under the President (but still under the Minister of Finance for coordination purposes);
- b* a 100 per cent increase in the head count of the revenue authority by 2019;
- c* gaining access to third-party data, particularly bank account data; and
- d* achieving synergy among law enforcement agencies to promote tax law enforcement and compliance.

IRELAND

I INTRODUCTION

The Irish landscape for tax dispute resolution provides a platform to avoid litigation through various means, including through various systems of qualifying disclosures, correspondence and by liaising with the specialist Large Cases Division of the Irish Revenue (Revenue). Additionally, where there is a dispute between a foreign tax authority and the Revenue, the Revenue may provide assistance in challenging foreign taxing rights of Irish tax-resident companies' profits through the mutual agreement procedure in Ireland's double taxation treaties.

The Irish tax appeals system was significantly reformed during the past year, and a new tax appeals regime came into operation on 21 March 2016. Substantial changes were introduced, and a new independent Tax Appeals Commission was established. There were a number of changes to the tax appeals process; most notably, the opportunity to appeal a decision of the Appeal Commissioners to the Circuit Court for a rehearing was removed and appeal hearings are now, by default, held in public. However, in certain specified circumstances or at the appellant's request, the Appeal Commissioners may hold the hearing or part of the hearing in private. A further change is that the Tax Appeals Commission is obliged to publish appeal determinations no later than 90 days after notifying the parties of the determination, and there are currently 19 determinations available to review on the Tax Appeals Commission website. A case management conference procedure was also introduced in a bid to expedite cases. This is where a commissioner directs that a meeting be held to help progress a case.

Where there is a dispute at law on an appeal commissioner's determination, a party can request the Appeal Commissioners to state and sign a case for the opinion of the High Court. The case stated is prepared by the Appeal Commissioners. Further recourse can be made from the High Court to the newly established Court of Appeal. Only in certain circumstances may a case be taken to the Irish Supreme Court. EU matters can be referred to the Court of Justice of the European Union, or indeed an appeal can be made there as part of the litigation process. Constitutional challenges may only be made after other means of litigation have been exhausted.

Litigating through the Appeal Commissioners and courts requires the hiring of specialist tax litigation counsel. This process is typically time-consuming and lengthy.

Costs can be substantial, although they can to some extent be restricted at the Appeal Commissioners' level; however, if an advance finding of fact occurs at that level, it cannot be overturned easily.

The Revenue has had some success in litigating aggressive domestic tax avoidance under the Irish general anti-avoidance provision contained in Section 811 of the Taxes Consolidation Act 1997, and more recently is focusing on specific anti-tax avoidance provisions. However, in the recent Supreme Court judgment in Revenue Commissioners v. Droog,<sup>2</sup> the Supreme Court dismissed the Revenue's appeal of a High Court decision that the opinion was out of time. The case concerned whether a Section 811 opinion was 'out of time' in light of the four-year time limit set out in the Irish Tax Code.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

i Initiating tax disputes

Tax disputes usually start by way of an appeal by the taxpayer against a notice of assessment raised by the Revenue. A welcome change introduced by the new tax appeals process is that a taxpayer who wishes to make an appeal against an assessment raised by the Revenue now does so in writing directly to the Appeal Commissioners and not in the first instance to the Revenue. Tax disputes may also arise where a settlement cannot be reached during the course of a Revenue audit.

The Revenue monitors compliance with Ireland's transfer pricing rules through the use of transfer pricing compliance reviews (TPCRs). A TPCR is a self-review by the taxpayer of its compliance with the transfer pricing rules. It is not an audit or a Revenue investigation; nor is it necessarily a precursor to an audit. The Revenue acknowledges that the TPCR will act as an information-gathering exercise, enabling the Revenue to receive important information (such as facts and data on a particular company or group's business structure, related-party transactions and transfer pricing methodologies used). The Revenue has indicated that in some instances the TPCR will result in a transfer pricing audit. This is likely to apply where the Revenue is not satisfied with the TPCR, or it has raised queries following receipt of the TPCR and such queries were not adequately addressed.

If, during the course of a Revenue audit, the Revenue and the taxpayer cannot reach a settlement and there is a technical dispute, an application can be made to have this referred to the Appeal Commissioners. In a Revenue audit situation, an application for an internal or external review can also be made by the taxpayer if the Revenue issues a notice of opinion in relation to a penalty being imposed and the taxpayer disagrees with the opinion.

In the case of an appeal against a notice of assessment, the taxpayer must make written notice of the appeal within 30 days of the date of the notice of assessment.

2 [2016] IESC 55.

ii Self-correction

The Revenue has issued a Code of Practice for Revenue Audits (Code of Practice) to provide taxpayers with guidelines relating to the audit process. The Code of Practice notes that the Revenue wishes to facilitate taxpayers who discover errors after submission of their relevant tax returns and wish to regularise this position. Therefore, as a general rule, a taxpayer may 'self-correct' its tax return without incurring a penalty by notifying the Revenue in writing of the adjustments required and paying any interest due. Generally, the self-correction must take place within 12 months of the due date for filing the return. The Code of Practice provides, in the case of VAT returns, that where the net underpayment of VAT is less than €6,000, the amount of the tax can be included (without interest or notification to the Revenue) as an adjustment on the next corresponding VAT return following that in which the error was made. The taxpayer must comply with particular time limits for self-correction as set out in the Code of Practice. The benefit of self-correction does not apply where the Revenue has notified the taxpayer of an audit, or contacted the taxpayer in relation to an investigation into the taxpayer's tax affairs.

iii Time limits

In situations where a taxpayer does not file a return (or makes one with which an inspector of taxes is not satisfied), the inspector may make an assessment that in his or her judgment ought to be made. As a general rule, an assessment cannot be made more than four years after the end of the accounting period to which it relates. No time limit applies where any form of neglect (as defined) or fraud has been committed by or on behalf of the taxpayer.

This four-year period applies generally to corporation tax, income tax and capital gains tax. The Revenue is generally prohibited from making enquiries related to raising an assessment after the expiry of the four-year period commencing at the end of the chargeable period in which the chargeable person has delivered a return for the chargeable period, unless at that time the inspector had reasonable grounds for believing that the return was insufficient due to its having been completed in a fraudulent or negligent manner.

iv Disclosure regime

An important element in Irish tax disputes is the 'voluntary disclosure' regime. With effect from 24 December 2008, the disclosure regime has moved from Revenue practice to having a legislative basis. Broadly, the regime allows a taxpayer to make a 'prompted qualifying disclosure' or an 'unprompted qualifying disclosure'. The disclosure must be made in writing and be accompanied by payment of tax and interest, but not penalties. To be a 'qualifying' disclosure, the taxpayer must provide complete information and full particulars of all matters giving rise to a tax liability under each tax head. By making a qualifying disclosure in relation to matters giving rise to a tax liability, a taxpayer can avoid prosecution and publication on the periodic list of tax defaulters. A further benefit of making a qualifying disclosure is that the penalties may be mitigated. The level of penalty depends on the category of default, (e.g., deliberate behaviour or carelessness), and the level of mitigation of penalty will depend, inter alia, upon whether the taxpayer cooperates with the Revenue.

There is also a separate disclosure regime for Ireland's general anti-avoidance provision, which in practice has been used only in very isolated and rare occasions.

v Revenue rulings

While it is possible to apply to the Revenue for a ruling in relation to certain matters, these rulings are not legally binding. Queries of a technical nature are dealt with by the Revenue's technical service to provide clarity for taxpayers on complex technical issues. It should be noted that certain Revenue rulings will be subject to the new exchange of information requirements in respect of tax rulings that have been set out in the Council Directive (EU) 2015/2376 (EU Directive) and the OECD framework. The EU Directive, which is not confined to intra-EU situations, applies to relevant rulings issued on or after 1 January 2017 and also has a look-back measure whereby information in relation to rulings issued, amended or reviewed since 2014 (regardless of their period of validity), and rulings issued in 2012 and 2013 (that were still valid on 1 January 2014), are to be exchanged. The OECD framework is already in effect, and applies to certain rulings issued on or after 1 April 2016. Similar to the EU Directive, there is a lookback provision whereby relevant rulings issued or modified in the tax years 2010 to 2013 (and in effect on 1 January 2014) and all relevant rulings issued or modified between 1 January 2014 and 31 March 2016 are to be exchanged. Unlike the EU Directive, under the OECD framework relevant rulings must be exchanged only with certain countries.

vi Freedom of information requests

The Freedom of Information Act allows people to request access to records, amendments of records or reasons for a decision of a public body, including the Revenue. This can be a useful tool for taxpayers.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i The courts

An appeal of a notice of assessment is determined by the newly established Tax Appeals Commission. The right to have an appeal reheard by a circuit court judge if dissatisfied with an appeal commissioner's decision has been abolished.

Either party may declare its dissatisfaction with the determination as being 'erroneous in point of law', and may within 21 days of the determination of the appeal commissioner require the appeal commissioner, by notice in writing, to state a case for the opinion of the High Court. The decision of the High Court can be appealed to the Court of Appeal. A decision of the Court of Appeal may only be appealed to the Supreme Court where the Supreme Court is satisfied that the decision involves a matter of general public importance or that the appeal is necessary in the interests of justice. A direct appeal from the High Court to the Supreme Court is only possible where the Supreme Court is satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances warranting an appeal to it. A precondition to the Supreme Court being so satisfied is that the decision involves a matter of general public importance or that the appeal is necessary in the interests of justice.

In an audit situation, where there is no agreement on the liability to a penalty or where the agreed penalty is not paid, the penalty will be determined by a relevant court. The relevant court will be the district court, the circuit court or the High Court, depending upon the level of penalty in question. The jurisdictional limits of each court as and from 3 February 2014 are as follows:

- a* district court: amounts up to €15,000;
- b* circuit court: amounts up to €75,000; and
- c* High Court: amounts in excess of €75,000.

ii Judicial review

Where a person claims that the Revenue's procedures are unjust and contravene natural justice, or disagrees with a tax or duty statute (e.g., there is no disagreement with the interpretation of the statute, but rather with the statute itself), that person may seek, in the High Court, a judicial review of the particular infringement.

iii Non-court procedures

A taxpayer can use the Revenue's complaint and review procedure to review Revenue decisions. The first procedural step is for the taxpayer to make a formal complaint to its local tax office. If the complaint cannot be resolved, or if the taxpayer is unhappy with the response, it can request a local review, which is normally carried out by the manager of the local tax office, although the taxpayer can request to have the local review carried out by a manager in the regional or divisional office. Where a taxpayer is dissatisfied with the local review, a request can be made to have the case reviewed by an independent internal or external reviewer, who will make a final decision. A request for an internal or external review should be submitted within 30 working days of the date of the local review decision. Adjudication on points of law is generally a matter for the Appeal Commissioners and the courts, and a reviewer will only intervene where it is satisfied that the Revenue opinion is clearly incorrect. Disputes with regard to civil penalties applicable to audit and investigation matters, enforcement proceedings and settlements involving publication will not be dealt with under the complaint and review procedure.

A taxpayer can also submit a complaint to the Office of the Ombudsman, which examines complaints about the administrative actions of government departments and offices, including the Office of the Revenue Commissioners.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Various provisions in Irish tax legislation impose different levels of fixed penalties depending on the tax default. Fixed penalties typically arise where a taxpayer fails to comply with provisions of the Tax Code but a liability to tax may not necessarily arise (e.g., failure to file particular returns).

Tax-geared penalties also apply in situations where the tax default gives rise to a tax liability. The tax-geared penalty varies in accordance with the category of tax default, whether the taxpayer made a qualifying disclosure (prompted or unprompted), and whether the taxpayer cooperated with the Revenue. The highest penalty is 100 per cent of the underpaid tax, and this arises in cases of deliberate default on the part of the taxpayer where there was no qualifying disclosure and the taxpayer did not cooperate with the Revenue. As set out in Section II, supra, the disclosure regime provides for the mitigation of penalties where a qualifying disclosure is made to the Revenue. The level of mitigation is reduced for a second or subsequent qualifying disclosure.

Criminal penalties may arise where a person commits a 'revenue offence'. On summary conviction, a person may be liable to a penalty of €5,000 or a term of imprisonment of up to 12 months, or both. On conviction on indictment, a person may be liable to a fine of €126,970 or a term of imprisonment of up to five years, or both.

Where an offence is committed by a body corporate, any person who was a director, manager, secretary or other officer, or a member of the committee of management or other controlling authority of the body at the time of the offence, can in certain circumstances be deemed to be personally guilty of the offence and proceeded against accordingly. This can happen where the offence was committed with the consent or connivance of the person concerned, or where the offence is attributable to any recklessness on the part of the person.

The Irish Companies Act 2014 came into effect on 1 June 2015. This puts a requirement on directors of all public limited companies and large private limited companies with a balance sheet total of greater than €12.5 million and a turnover of greater than €25 million to include an annual compliance statement on a company's Irish tax affairs. This statement should include a confirmation by the directors that the company has in place appropriate structures or arrangements that are, in the opinion of the directors, designed to secure material compliance with its relevant obligations under company and tax law. Failure to comply with this statement could attract penalties or imprisonment.

The Revenue has indicated in its Code of Practice that the following tax offences are most likely to be prosecuted:

- a* deliberate omissions from tax returns;
- b* false claims for repayment;
- c* use of forged or falsified documents;
- d* facilitating fraudulent evasion of tax;
- e* systematic schemes to evade tax;
- f* use of offshore bank accounts to evade tax;
- g* insidious schemes of tax evasion; and
- h* failure to remit fiduciary taxes (as distinct from minor delays in such remittance).

A hard line has been taken by the courts in relation to the prosecution of tax offences in recent years. Prosecutions have resulted in a number of high-profile convictions and the imposition of terms of imprisonment, heavy fines, or both.

The rate of interest on a late payment of tax is currently 0.0219 per cent or 0.0274 per cent (depending on the tax) per day on the unpaid tax.

i Recovering overpaid tax

Overpaid tax should be refunded on a valid claim being made by a taxpayer. Such a claim will usually be made automatically on the filing of the appropriate tax return evidencing the actual tax liability of the taxpayer compared with the tax paid. As a general rule, a claim for a repayment of tax must be made within four years of the end of the chargeable period to which the claim relates.

Where the repayment due arises from a mistaken interpretation by the Revenue in the application of the law, interest will be paid from the end of the chargeable period or, if later, when the tax was paid, until the repayment is made. Interest will not apply, however, for any period where the repayment is withheld as a result of tax returns not being filed.

In the case of all other repayments, interest will be paid from 93 days after a claim becomes a valid claim until the repayment is made. Interest will not apply, however, for any period where the repayment is withheld as a result of tax returns not being filed.

Prior to making a refund of any overpaid tax, the Revenue is permitted to offset an overpayment against any other tax liability (under any tax head).

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Legitimate expectation

In Ireland, it is generally accepted that to succeed in a claim based on a failure of a public body to respect a legitimate expectation, three matters as set out in the Supreme Court decision of Glencar Exploration v. Mayo County Council<sup>3</sup> need to be established:

- a the public authority must have made a statement or adopted a position amounting to a promise or representation, express or implied, as to how it will act in respect of an identifiable area of its activity (the 'representation');
- b the representation must be addressed or conveyed, either directly or indirectly, to an identifiable person or group of persons affected annually or potentially in such a way that it forms part of a transaction definitively entered into or a relationship between that person or group and the public authority, or that the person or group has acted on the faith of the representation; and
- c the representation must be such as to create an expectation reasonably entertained by the person or group that the public body will abide by the representation to the extent that it would be unjust to permit the public authority to resile from it.

Judicial review

In the 2012 High Court McNamee v. The Revenue Commissioners case,<sup>4</sup> the taxpayer in question had been issued with an opinion under Section 811 of the Taxes Consolidation Act 1997 (Ireland's general anti-avoidance provision, discussed further in Section VIII, infra), and claimed that the Revenue was obliged, but failed, to issue notices under Section 811 'immediately' after it decided the transactions involved a tax advantage. The transactions in question involved a form of financial straddles using government gilts and foreign currency, which allegedly gave rise to artificial capital losses that were used to shelter capital gains. The High Court found in favour of the Revenue, holding that the relevant officer of the Revenue had to consider all the relevant criteria set out in Section 811 before issuing the notice, and that it had accordingly issued the notice of opinion 'immediately' after the Revenue officer formed the opinion that the transactions were tax avoidance transactions.

Constitutionality of decisions

It is quite difficult for taxpayers to succeed in arguments that decisions of the Revenue are unconstitutional. This is usually seen as a last resort where all other avenues have been exhausted.

---

3 [2002] IR, 84.

4 [2012] IEHC 500.

Revenue's complaint and review procedure/Ombudsman

In cases where the dispute relates to allegations of unfairness towards a particular taxpayer as distinct from the actual imposition of tax, it is most likely that the Revenue's complaint procedure should be followed or that the Ombudsman be consulted.

Revenue opinions

As noted in Section II, supra, Revenue opinions are not legally binding. The Revenue's guidance notes on providing technical assistance provide that an opinion given by the Revenue is based on the specific facts relevant to that case and its particular circumstances only. Any material change in the facts or circumstances could affect an opinion, and any such changes should be brought to the notice of the office that gave the opinion or interpretation so that the case can be reviewed. Further, it should be noted that an opinion given in relation to a specific case should not be relied on in any other case. Some opinions will arise from a unique set of circumstances. An opinion will be given on the basis of the legislation as it exists at the time of the request. If this changes in advance of the completion of the transaction, then the opinion may no longer be valid. Redacted forms of opinions issued can be obtained through a freedom of information request. As noted in Section II, supra, these rulings may also now fall within the new exchange of information arrangements in respect of tax rulings.

iii Claimants

Only the party who files a tax return can bring a claim against the Revenue. In the case of a person who suffers unlawful tax (e.g., VAT), recovering such unlawfully imposed tax would generally be a matter of contract law between the parties. An aggrieved person would not have any recourse to the Revenue.

In group scenarios, except in the case of VAT, all parties file their own tax returns. It is generally a matter of contract law between the parties how they treat reliefs surrendered, and tax liabilities arising or reduced as a result of the use of group relief. Only the taxpayer filing the return can claim a refund of tax due to it.

VI COSTS

In the case of a hearing before the Tax Appeal Commissions, each side bears its own costs. The awarding of costs in tax cases before the courts follows the general rule that an order for costs to proceedings shall be at the discretion of the courts. In normal circumstances, costs are awarded on the basis of costs following the event, namely, the successful party is entitled to its costs. There is no specific category of cases that fall outside the general rule of costs. The courts may use their discretion, however, to award costs to the unsuccessful party where the matter at issue is one of 'public interest' and the interests of justice require the courts to do so.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

There are no specific provisions for alternative dispute resolution. Disputes are generally settled through negotiation during the audit process. Where agreement cannot be reached, litigation typically commences.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Ireland's general anti-avoidance legislation, as provided for in Section 811 of the Taxes Consolidation Act 1997, enables the Revenue to form the opinion that a transaction gives rise to a tax advantage, and that the transaction was not undertaken or arranged primarily for any reason other than to give rise to a tax advantage, and in such circumstances the transaction is known as a 'tax avoidance transaction'. The Revenue is empowered to determine the tax consequences of the tax avoidance transaction, which may involve making any adjustment required to withdraw the tax advantage. There are two important exclusions provided for in Section 811. The first exclusion applies where a transaction was undertaken to realise profits in the course of the business activities of the person, and was not undertaken or arranged primarily to give rise to a tax advantage. The second exclusion arises where the transaction was undertaken or arranged for the purpose of benefiting from any relief, allowance or abatement provided by tax legislation, where the transaction would not result, directly or indirectly, in a misuse of the provision or an abuse of the provision having regard to the purpose for which it was provided.

On 14 December 2011, the Supreme Court issued its seminal decision in O'Flynn.<sup>5</sup> This was the first decision of the Supreme Court concerning Ireland's general anti-avoidance legislation, and the Supreme Court found in favour of the Revenue.

O'Flynn concerned a relief from corporation tax that was available to companies on profits earned from qualifying exports (export sales relief, which had long since been abolished). In addition, dividends received from an export sales relief company were also relieved from income tax in the hands of individual shareholders. O'Flynn involved a series of 40 individual steps undertaken over 50 days that resulted in two companies reducing their profits by making capital contributions to other companies (which were later written off), while the shareholders of both companies received dividends from other entities that were relieved from tax under the export sales relief scheme. In essence, the series of transactions involved shareholders of a company that did not benefit from export sales relief receiving dividends from another company – one that did benefit from export sales relief – so that the dividends received by the shareholders of the first company were not subject to tax.

The decision of the Supreme Court centred on whether the transactions involved constituted a misuse or abuse of a relieving provision (the export sales relief). The judgments (both majority and minority) provide a useful summary on statutory interpretation in Ireland and how it applies to taxing statutes. O'Donnell J, in the majority, held that Section 811 expressly requires the utilisation of a purposive approach to statutory interpretation. He noted that legislation in the form of Section 811 was specifically required to overcome the rejection by the Irish courts of a 'substance over form' approach to statutory interpretation. The Revenue, in forming its opinion under Section 811, is expressly required to consider the form and substance of the transaction. In addition, in considering whether there has been misuse or abuse of a relieving provision, this must be determined having regard to the purpose for which that relieving provision was provided. He noted that '[t]he function of the Revenue Commissioners, and on appeal the Appeal Commissioners, and the courts, is to seek to discern the intention of the Oireachtas<sup>6</sup> and to faithfully apply it to the individual case'.

5 O'Flynn Construction Limited & Others v. The Revenue Commissioners [2011] IESC 47.

6 The Irish legislative body.

He went on to note that, in this case, ‘the form of the transaction was highly artificial and contrived’, and held that ‘a scheme which allows the shareholders in a non-exporting company to benefit from export sales relief on the profits of the non-exporting company, is surely a misuse or abuse of the scheme having regard to the purpose for which the provision is provided’.

In considering whether the second exclusion from Section 811 applies, there is no distinction between misuse or abuse, but ‘what is important is that full effect is given to the intention of the Section that only appropriate uses of the provisions get the benefit of the tax relief’.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

There have been very few cases before the Irish courts involving double taxation treaties. The most recent case, from 2007, concerned the tax residence of an individual who argued that she was resident in Italy for the purposes of the Irish–Italian double taxation treaty (Kinsella v. The Revenue Commissioners).<sup>7</sup> The Revenue sought to argue that the treaty did not apply to Irish capital gains tax. The High Court found, however, that the treaty did apply to Irish capital gains tax, and that the individual had been resident in Italy in the year in question under the terms of the treaty.

As regards the interpretation of tax treaties, Ireland acceded to the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties with effect from 6 September 2006. In Kinsella, the Court noted that even before this, it was clear from the decision of Barrington J in McGimpsey v. Ireland<sup>8</sup> that, in interpreting an international treaty, a court ought to have regard to the general principles of international law, and in particular the rules of interpretation of such treaties as set out in Articles 31 and 32 of the Vienna Convention. These Articles require that a court interprets a treaty in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to its terms in their context, and in the light of the treaty’s object and purpose. Where such an interpretation leaves the meaning of the treaty ambiguous or obscure, or leads to a manifestly absurd or unreasonable result, then recourse can be made to supplementary means of interpretation.

Avoiding litigation is the preferable route for taxpayers and the Revenue alike. Therefore, in cross-border transactions, it is possible for taxpayers to enter into an advance pricing agreement (APA), agreeing with the Revenue the arm’s-length price for arrangements with related parties outside Ireland. The Revenue will engage with taxpayers and negotiate bilateral and multilateral APAs with countries with which Ireland has double taxation treaties. The conclusion of an APA will provide the taxpayer with certainty that its transfer pricing arrangements agreed thereunder are in compliance with Ireland’s transfer pricing rules, and thereby result in fewer disputes.

The Irish courts’ interpretation of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union and the EEA will follow the interpretation rules for other international treaties (i.e., as set out in the Vienna Convention).

Specifically, in relation to VAT, there have been a number of cases where the European Commission has taken cases against Ireland for its failure to comply with the Sixth VAT

7 [2007] IEHC 250.

Directive.<sup>9</sup> These cases have resulted in legislative amendments in Ireland. For example, the Commission took a case against Ireland challenging the VAT treatment of public authorities, which, under Irish law, were not obliged to charge VAT on the provision of certain services. This was seen as giving rise to a distortion of competition.

Again in relation to VAT, there may be discrepancies between the Sixth VAT Directive and how it is transposed into domestic Irish legislation. Many Member States offer detailed guidance on the interpretation of the Directive. For example, in the case of the management of regulated funds, a service that is exempt from VAT, many Member States have clarified the meaning of 'management', whereas Ireland has not. In practice, it is understood that the Revenue follows the approach of other Member States.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

As noted in Section I, supra, targeting domestic tax avoidance has been a recent area of focus. The Revenue's win in O'Flynn was seen as an important victory, indicating that Section 811 would stand up in the courts and should not therefore be taken lightly. It had been commonplace for some advisers to argue that Section 811 would not work, and that it would not be upheld by the courts. It was suggested that Section 811 was unconstitutional (not argued in O'Flynn yet) or that general anti-avoidance legislation could not take precedence over specific anti-avoidance legislation (argued unsuccessfully in O'Flynn). Taxpayers will need to be cognisant of Section 811 in all their tax planning and ensure that all transactions entered into can be commercially justified.

It is expected that the Revenue will continue to focus on artificial tax avoidance schemes, and seek to challenge these under Section 811 and more specific anti-avoidance provisions. This is particularly the case given its recent success in this area.

Transfer pricing is a relatively new concept in Ireland and, as noted in Section II, supra, the Revenue has recently introduced self-reviews of compliance with transfer pricing rules. It is expected that this will also be an area of focus for the Revenue in the immediate future.

There has been an increase in the number of Revenue audits of research and development tax credit claims over the past few years. These audits involve a comprehensive review of research and development tax credit claims from both a scientific or technological perspective (by a Revenue-appointed expert) and a financial or tax technical perspective (by a Revenue Inspector). In addition, the Revenue has recently issued a number of letters requesting a 'self-review' of research and development tax credits by claimants. The letter typically requires the claimant to answer a number of questions about the tax credit claimed. The self-review does not constitute a formal audit or a notification of a formal audit, but may lead to such an audit based on the responses given.

The level of expenses claimed by independent contractors has also been an area of recent focus for the Revenue. This has continued to be an area of focus for the Revenue. This may in turn lead to cases where an individual's status as an independent contractor is brought into question and employee status alleged. The Department of Finance initiated a consultation process in January 2016 on the use of intermediary-type employment structures and self-employment arrangements, and a further review of these types of arrangements is expected.

The Revenue is also a representative for Ireland on the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Committee on Fiscal Affairs. A dedicated Revenue team is involved in work arising from the base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS) action plan published in July 2013. Ireland's response to Action 13 of BEPS minimum standard of country-by-country (CBC) reporting was published in the Irish Finance Act 2015 and recently amended by the Finance Act 2016. Regulations were also introduced in 2016. The legislation commenced with effect from 1 January 2016 and will apply where the ultimate parent is tax resident in Ireland whose consolidated group turnover exceeds €750 million. The parent company will need to disclose information for each tax jurisdiction in which they do business in a CBC report. The legislation gives authority to the Revenue to share CBC reports with other tax or governmental authorities, provided that jurisdiction and Ireland have entered into a qualifying agreement on the exchange of information. Ireland has 72 double taxation agreement partners and a further 25 tax information exchange partners, giving Revenue considerable reach.

On 21 June 2016, the Council of the European Union agreed on the Anti-Tax Avoidance Directive (ATA Directive), which sets out anti-avoidance rules across five specific areas, including controlled foreign company (CFC) rules, deductibility of interest, exit taxation, hybrid mismatches and a general anti-avoidance rule.

Some of the ATA Directive measures were to be transposed into national law by each Member State by 1 January 2017, with certain measures introduced at later dates. Member States that have targeted rules that are 'equally effective to the interest limitation rule set out in the ATA Directive' may continue to use these rules until 1 January 2024.

Measures introduced in the 2016 Finance Act were introduced to tackle offshore structures used to avoid paying tax and deny 'offshore defaulters' the opportunity to use the voluntary disclosure regime with effect from 1 May 2017. A new strict liability criminal offence to facilitate the prosecution of serious cases of offshore tax evasion was introduced along with investment in systems and equipment to assist the Revenue in its investigations. The EU and OECD exchange of information resources should further assist the Revenue in this regard.

In Ireland, the Revenue takes on the role of the competent authority in resolving international tax disputes and ensuring the correct allocation of taxable profits to Ireland. Further to a BEPS consultation process in 2014, initiated by the Department of Finance, the need for the Revenue to devote additional resources to the competent authority function was highlighted. In recent years, the competent authority team has been increased significantly. The role of the competent authority is increasingly important due to the ever-changing dynamics of international trade.

Finally, the European Commission's announcement of its decision that Ireland granted illegal state aid to two companies in the Apple group in an amount of up to €13 billion plus interest focused international interest on Ireland's tax regime in August 2016. However, the Commission did state that the decision does not call into question the general Irish tax system or its tax rate, and it is important to note that the Apple case can be limited to its facts, as they apply to the tax regime that was then in existence.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Ireland's relatively low corporate tax rate of 12.5 per cent on trading income, a limited withholding tax regime and limited transfer pricing, and the recent introduction of a 'knowledge development box', means that Ireland is still a focal point for international tax strategies. Multinational corporations' tax charges on profits are increasingly being analysed. To avoid and protect against non-Irish tax challenges to Irish structures, groups with operations in Ireland need to review existing arrangements to ensure the underlying intragroup written agreements and other legal documentation appropriately reflect the substance of that which occurs in Ireland. If the underlying legal structures are simply boilerplate intragroup agreements, the Irish taxpaying corporate should anticipate foreign tax authority challenges.

ITALY

I INTRODUCTION

The landscape for tax dispute resolution has changed dramatically in Italy. Pre-litigation tax settlements were not previously foreseen by the procedural tax rules (and their legitimacy, particularly their compatibility with constitutional principles, was disputed). The absence of such instruments was at times counterbalanced by the enactment of tax amnesties, which also provided the option to settle pending litigation. The Italian tax legislator introduced judicial settlements in 1992 (with effect from 1996) and pre-litigation settlements in 1997. The use of pre-litigation settlements has increased over time, as they provide for a large reduction in tax penalties, which in Italy may be more than twice the amount of the assessed tax. Moreover, pre-litigation settlements avoid the uncertainties associated with the very lengthy time frame of tax litigation (on average, a tax dispute lasts 10 years if litigated up to the Supreme Court).<sup>2</sup> The areas in which pre-litigation settlements are most successful are those involving evaluation aspects regarding corporate income tax (transfer pricing, anti-avoidance, deduction of payments to blacklisted jurisdictions, etc.).

That said, tax litigation in Italy still has relevance. The most recent statistics issued by the Ministry of Economy, published in June 2016<sup>3</sup> and relating to the situation as at 31 December 2015, show that the number of cases pending before the tax courts of first instance was 386,990, and the number of cases pending before the tax courts of second instance was 143,854.

3 'Relazione sul monitoraggio dello stato del contenzioso tributario e sull'attività delle commissioni tributarie – anno 2014' and 'Appendici statistiche – anno 2015', issued in June 2016 by the Ministry of Economy and the Directorate of Tax Justice. These documents can be found on the Ministry of Economy website.

Moreover, the same statistics highlight that in 2015:

- a* around 69 per cent of cases filed before the tax courts of first instance and around 55 per cent of cases filed before the tax courts of second instance involved litigations for amounts not higher than €20,000. This was one of the reasons that led the parliament to enact compulsory mediation;<sup>4</sup> and
- b* the amount of cases won by taxpayers before the tax courts of first instance was around 32 per cent (45 per cent of the cases were in favour of the tax authorities);<sup>5</sup> and the tax courts of second instance was around 40 per cent (45 per cent of the cases were in favour of the tax authorities).

Legislative Decree No. 156 of 24 September 2015, issued in the context of a broader reform of the Italian tax system, introduced important changes that have modified some rules of the Italian tax litigation system and that will be explained below.

Most of the changes introduced are effective as of 1 January 2016.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

The Italian legislation on tax litigation procedure (Legislative Decree No. 546/1992) regulates the procedure for commencing a tax dispute for all kinds of taxes.

This system is strongly influenced by the Italian tax system, which is based on self-assessment (i.e., taxpayers must file their tax returns on the basis of their interpretation of tax legislation). The tax authorities can rectify the tax return within certain deadlines<sup>6</sup> by issuing a deed of assessment. In such cases, the tax dispute is initiated by the taxpayer challenging the deed of assessment issued by the tax authorities.

<sup>5</sup> The remaining cases were closed either through judicial settlement or partially in favour of both the taxpayer and the tax authorities.

<sup>6</sup> Under Article 43(1) of Presidential Decree No. 600 of 29 September 1973 (as amended by Article 1(131) of Law No. 208 of 28 December 2015), the statute of limitations applicable to taxpayers who have duly filed their tax returns for the purposes of corporate income tax (IRES) and regional tax (IRAP) elapses at the end of the fifth calendar year (31 December) following the one in which the tax return was filed. However this new statute of limitations applies only to notices of assessment relating to fiscal years that will be current on 31 December 2016 and to subsequent fiscal years. For the previous fiscal years, the statute of limitations applies under the rules that were in force before the amendments enacted by Law No. 208 of 28 December 2015. In particular, before such amendments the statute of limitations expired at the end of the fourth calendar year (31 December) following the one in which the tax return was filed. However, the statute of limitations was doubled if the tax violations committed by the taxpayer gave rise to the obligation to communicate the possible commission of a criminal offence to the public prosecutor. In this event, the deadline for issuing and serving a notice of assessment expired at the end of the eighth calendar year following the filing of the tax return, provided that the communication to the public prosecutor took place before the expiry of the ordinary statute of limitations (i.e., before the

- The deed of assessment may be challenged through two main procedures:
- a if the case involves an amount of tax higher than €20,000, the assessment must be challenged by filing a deed of appeal before the court of first instance within 60 days<sup>7</sup> from the date on which the deed has been notified. In particular, the deed of appeal must be served first to the administrative (tax) body that has issued the assessment. To commence litigation properly, the taxpayer must file the trial record with the competent tax court within 30 days from the date on which the deed of appeal was served to the counterparty. The trial record provides the relevant court with the deed of appeal, any documents or evidence, and proof that the deed has been properly served to the administrative body; and
  - b regarding deeds of assessment of taxes<sup>8</sup> (e.g., corporate income tax, personal income tax, VAT, regional tax on productive activities, registration tax) involving an amount of tax lower than €20,000, the legislature recently enacted an advanced compulsory mediation procedure (mediation can involve disputes relating to deeds of assessment, deeds issuing penalties, notices of payment, denials of tax refunds, withdrawals of tax benefits or denials of tax amnesties, or any other act that can be appealed before the tax courts). The value of the dispute is based on the higher amount of tax (interest and penalties are not relevant). In the event of an appeal against a deed issuing only penalties, the value is determined by such penalties. In such cases, taxpayers must file and give notice of both the appeal and the application for mediation to the competent office within the deadline for the appeal (see above) with a copy of the documentary evidence that the taxpayer intends to submit to the tax court. Mediation is compulsory; failure to submit to mediation leads to a claim preclusion.<sup>9</sup> The tax authorities can accept (even partially) or reject the request, or may make an independent proposal for mediation. The mediation agreement is executed upon its endorsement by the tax authorities and on payment of the entire amount due (or of the first instalment due) within 20 days from the day of execution. In cases of mediation, penalties are due in a reduced amount of 35 per cent of the original amount.<sup>10</sup> The collection of the sums due is suspended throughout the mediation procedure. If the request for mediation is rejected (or if no action is taken by the tax authorities within 90 days), the taxpayer must deposit the trial records with the court of first instance within 30 days. If the end of the fourth calendar year (31 December) following the one in which the tax return was filed). Similar provisions apply (and applied until 31 December 2015) for VAT purposes under Article 57 of Presidential Decree No. 633 of 26 October 1972.

- 7 Under the Italian law on civil law procedure, the computation of deadlines is suspended from 1 August to 31 August of each year. This suspension also applies to tax cases.
- 8 Due to the changes introduced by Legislative Decree No. 156/2015, as of 1 January 2016, the mediation procedure is mandatory for all deeds of assessment containing a tax claim and not only for those filed by the Italian Revenue Agency (e.g., customs agency, municipality).
- 9 This modification was introduced to avoid the unconstitutionality of the provision, which would have been entailed in the case of the inadmissibility of the appeal.
- 10 This rate has been introduced by Legislative Decree 156/2015 and replaced the previous rate equal to 40 per cent.

mediation procedure does not succeed, the unsuccessful party in the tax trial must pay, in addition to court costs, a sum of 50 per cent of the costs of the proceedings as reimbursement of the expenses of the mediation procedure.

However, tax litigation may also arise from the denial of a refund request filed by the taxpayer (rather than as the result of a tax authority deed of assessment). Reasons leading a taxpayer to apply for a refund may vary (e.g., the taxpayer paid more tax than was due or argues that the tax was not to be paid since the relevant legislation was contrary to the Italian Constitution or European law). The right to file an application for a refund must be exercised within certain deadlines provided by the law (e.g., the right to file an application for refund of income tax is generally exercised within 48 months from the date of payment; the right to claim a refund of VAT is generally forfeited after two years from the date of payment).

Once the application is filed, two scenarios are possible:

- a* the tax authorities issue a deed stating that the refund is not due, in which case the procedure challenging a deed of assessment, described above, is followed; and
- b* the tax authorities do not reply (silent denial), in which case the refund request is deemed to have been implicitly denied after a 90-day period. In such cases, the implicit denial may be challenged before the tax court within 10 years.<sup>11</sup>

The above procedures apply irrespective of the tax involved (direct or indirect) and of the subject involved (individuals, companies or partnerships).

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

Tax cases in Italy are dealt with by specialised tax courts, which are independent bodies. Notwithstanding this, tax judges are not professional judges.<sup>12</sup>

The tax judiciary is organised in two tiers: provincial tax courts are the courts of first instance and are established in the seat of each province of the state; and regional tax courts are the courts of appeal and are established in the seat of each region of the state. Certain decentralised sections of regional tax courts have been created, particularly in geographically extensive regions.

The deadline to appeal a decision of a court of first instance before a regional tax court is six months from the date on which the judgment is deposited. If one party duly serves notice of the judgment to the opposing party, the period during which the opponent may bring an appeal is limited to 60 days.

Judgments of a regional tax court can be brought before the Tax Chamber of the Civil Supreme Court only in limited cases, including cases where the substantive or procedural law was wrongly applied or where the motivation on the key facts of the matter has been omitted.

11 Legislative Decree No. 156/2015 provides, effective as of 1 June 2016, the possibility for taxpayers to enforce positive decisions on tax refunds (and thus obtain payment of refunds) even if the decisions are still subject to appeal and litigation is still ongoing. The refund could be subject to the filing of a guarantee.

12 Legislative Decree No. 156/2015 provides that tax courts will establish specialised chambers dedicated to the decision on particularly controversial significant tax matters to increase the specialisation of tax judges.

In tax cases, at any level, only documentary evidence can be used (i.e., witnesses are not admitted).

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Administrative penalties may be divided into three categories:

- a* formal infringements (i.e., infringements that do not lead to a failure to pay tax). The amount of these penalties is provided as a range of fixed amounts;
- b* infringements related to tax returns. The amount of these penalties is provided as a range of penalties that depend on the amount of the unpaid tax (e.g., for failing to file an income tax return, penalties range from 120 to 240 per cent of the tax due, and for filing a false income tax return, penalties range from 90 to 180 per cent of the higher amount of tax due);<sup>13</sup> and
- c* failure to pay tax (including the delayed payment of tax). The penalty is equal to 30 per cent of the tax due (or paid late).

If a range is provided, the amount of the penalty is assessed by the tax authorities on the basis of the seriousness of the infringement, to be evaluated also in light of the behaviour of the taxpayer. The application of higher penalties must be justified by the tax authorities.

Penalties are increased by 30 per cent in the case of income sourced outside Italy.

Accessory penalties, such as a ban from participating in public tenders, may also apply.

If the infringement is related to the tax obligations of a company, only the company is liable to administrative penalties (not the individual who, for example, signed the tax return). Other persons may be liable in addition to the company to the extent that they concurred to commit the infringement (e.g., an external adviser that promoted a disputed transaction).

Penalties do not apply in cases of objective uncertainty on the interpretation of the law, although in practice this safe harbour is rarely accepted by the tax authorities (or courts).

Generally, any large tax dispute triggers a criminal investigation as the thresholds for triggering a tax crime are very low.

For instance, the crime of filing a false tax return is triggered (irrespective of fraud) provided there is a difference between the tax declared and the tax assessed of more than €150,000, and the higher amount of tax assessed represents more than 10 per cent of the declared turnover (or the costs disallowed are more than 10 per cent of the turnover). The 10 per cent turnover test is irrelevant if the higher taxable base is greater than €3 million.<sup>14</sup>

For tax crimes, the company bears no criminal responsibility itself, so the criminal investigation only involves individuals (e.g., the legal representatives of the company in the years in which the tax returns had to be filed, or the individual who signed the tax returns, or both).

13 The penalties for filing a false income tax return have been recently reduced by Legislative Decree No. 158 of 24 September 2015. The new provisions entered into force on 1 January 2016 according to the Finance Bill for 2016 (Law No. 208 of 28 December 2015). The old provisions provided a range equal to 100 to 200 per cent.

14 These thresholds have been recently introduced by Legislative Decree No. 158/2015. The old thresholds were equal to €50,000 for the taxes evaded and €2 million for the higher taxable base.

Normally, tax audit reports or tax assessments indicate whether the auditors have informed the criminal prosecutor about a potential crime. The criminal prosecutor will then decide in parallel whether the conditions for the crime have been met and eventually whether to start a criminal proceeding.

The administrative and criminal proceedings are parallel proceedings, and their outcomes can diverge. Payment of the claims, even by way of settlement of the administrative proceeding, determines under the law only an automatic reduction of the criminal penalty, although in practice prosecutors tend to close criminal proceedings if the revenue interest is satisfied.<sup>15</sup>

i Recovering overpaid tax

See Section II, supra.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Procedural tax rules provide an exhaustive list of acts by the tax authorities that can be appealed before the tax courts. This list has been broadly interpreted taking into account the fact that the acts of the tax authorities generally affect the liability of the taxpayer. If the act of the tax authorities cannot be appealed before the tax courts, it may be appealed before the administrative courts, provided that the conditions for such an appeal are met. Furthermore, procedural tax rules provide that the tax courts are not allowed to apply any act of the tax authorities that is relevant to the case, notwithstanding the fact that such an act may be appealed before the competent court.

iii Claimants

Tax litigation is generally initiated by the person who is liable to the disputed tax.

Certain exceptions exist, including:

- a* final withholding tax: if the withholding agent did not levy a final withholding tax, the tax and penalties are assessed for the withholding agent, who can initiate a civil law action against the recipient of the income for the amount of the tax due. On the other hand, if the withholding agent did not levy an advance withholding tax, the tax is assessed for the recipient of the income, while the penalties are assessed for the withholding agent; and
- b* corporate income tax consolidation: when a company participates in a corporate tax consolidation scheme, the assessment relating to an alleged tax violation of a consolidated company is served also to the consolidating company, and both parties have to appeal the assessment. In this case, both parties may stand together before the tax court.

15 Of particular relevance is the double jeopardy ruling of the Italian judicial system after the European Convention on Human Rights, Chamber II, No. 172 of 4 March 2014, Grande Stevens and Others v. Italy, which stated the illegitimacy of the joinder of administrative and criminal sanctions according to the ‘Engel rule’.

Additional comments must be made for cases involving a refund of VAT. In fact, in VAT cases, a refund may be sought by a supplier even if the VAT burden is economically suffered by the customer. The latter is entitled to ask for a VAT refund only in relation to the supplier in a civil law procedure. The discrepancy between the applicable statutes of limitations (two years for suppliers in relation to the Revenue Agency, 10 years for customers in relation to suppliers) was challenged on the grounds of its compatibility with European law and the case was referred by the Supreme Court to the European Court of Justice (ECJ).<sup>16</sup> The Supreme Court,<sup>17</sup> in the light of the principle enshrined in the decision of the ECJ, concluded that the supplier is not entitled to obtain a refund of undue VAT after the two-year deadline unless it is proven that the customer obtained the VAT refund as a consequence of a decision of a civil law court that cannot be appealed any further; and the tax administration is put in the position of participating in this civil law judgment to argue that no refund shall be made (principle of cross-examination).

VI COSTS

Italian law regulating tax litigation provides that the losing party must bear the costs of the litigation and that the costs of the winning party are declared by the court on the basis of the costs incurred. Courts can rule that each party bears, in whole or in part, its own costs, provided that both litigants are partially losers or in cases of exceptional and serious reasons that must be explained in the judgment.<sup>18</sup>

i Pre-audit

If the infringement has not yet been assessed or investigated by the tax authorities, it may be self-corrected within certain deadlines by the payment of reduced penalties. In such cases, the amount of the reduced penalty varies depending on the point at which the violation is self-corrected by the taxpayer.<sup>19</sup>

Furthermore, the Italian legislator has launched a voluntary disclosure procedure.<sup>20</sup> The procedure does not qualify for tax amnesty and implies the full payment of all taxes (and interests for late payment) due in relation to the unreported assets, and a reduction of the penalties for failing to report assets and the income therefrom.

16 Case C-427/10, Banca Popolare Antoniana Veneta.

17 In Judgment No. 12666/2012.

18 This rule was introduced by Legislative Decree No. 156/2015.

19 In such cases, penalties may be lowered down to 1/10th of the minimum penalties due.

20 See Act No. 186 of 15 December 2014, which entered into force on 1 January 2015.

The procedure was available for taxpayers until 30 November 2015 and covers violations committed until 30 September 2014. With Decree Law No. 193 of 22 October 2016, the Italian legislator introduced a new voluntary disclosure procedure, very similar to the previous one, which covers violations committed until 30 September 2016. That procedure will be available until 31 July 2017.

Moreover, with Decree Law No. 193 of 22 October 2016, the Italian legislator introduced a new provision (Article 6) that entitles the taxpayer to pay without penalties the amounts assigned to the collector agent until 31 December 2016 and not yet paid (i.e. still standing). To benefit from this new rule, the taxpayer has to withdraw the appeal, if any, connected to the amounts involved in such procedure.

ii Post-audit

If the taxpayer is subject to a tax audit, at the end of their activity, the auditors (which may be part of the audit department of either the tax authorities or the tax police) shall draft a final tax audit report in which all the allegations are supported. Such a report does not contain a final claim. After the report has been served, the following options are available:

- a* the taxpayer can submit observations or additional documentation likely to prove that the tax auditor's conclusion is incorrect. Certain limitations to the option to issue an assessment for the tax authorities apply in the 60-day period following the date on which the report is served;<sup>21</sup>
- b* the taxpayer can consider filing an application to start a settlement procedure in relation to the contents of the report. The settlement procedure may lead to a reduction of the assessed tax, although there is no obligation upon the tax authorities to enter into the settlement. If a settlement is reached, penalties are reduced to one-third of their minimum amount on the settled tax;<sup>22</sup> or
- c* the taxpayer can decide to wait for the further assessment activity by the competent tax authority.

iii Post-assessment

Following notice of a tax assessment:

- a* the taxpayer may pay the assessed tax within 60 days, together with reduced penalties. In such cases, the penalties are reduced to one-third of the assessed amount, while the higher amount of tax assessed is definitively due; and

21 For the tax police reports issued on 31 December 2015, if the taxpayer believed that the tax police report fairly assessed the facts and the corresponding amounts, it was possible to accept its content within 30 days of the report being served. In such circumstances, within the following 60 days the tax authorities served the taxpayer with a 'settlement deed' showing the tax due on the adjustment included in the report, and the minimum applicable penalties reduced to one-sixth. The amounts due under such a settlement deed had to be paid within 20 days from receipt of the deed (an instalment programme was available).

22 Until 31 December 2015, in the event that the taxpayer cannot opt for acceptance of the tax police report or in other circumstances (e.g., a change of approach from that of the original claim, on the part of the tax authorities) the tax authorities may issue an 'invitation deed' to the taxpayer. Such a deed would contain the proposal to settle the matter with the payment by the taxpayer or to start a settlement procedure (see option (b) above). In cases of acceptance, the taxpayer could pay the tax indicated in an invitation deed served by the tax authorities with the minimum applicable penalties reduced to one-sixth. In the event that the taxpayer did not accept the payment proposal and did not accept the start of a settlement discussion, an assessment notice was issued.

b the taxpayer may file a settlement request; in such cases, the 60-day deadline for the appeal is suspended for 90 days. The settlement may lead to a reduction of the assessed tax, although there is no obligation upon the tax authorities to enter into the settlement. If a settlement is reached, penalties are reduced to one-third of their minimum amount on the settled tax.

iv After the commencement of the tax litigation

It is still possible to settle the case when it is under litigation. Legislative Decree No. 156/2015 introduced the possibility to conclude a judicial settlement even during the second-tier judgment.<sup>23</sup> The judicial settlement, as opposed to the settlement reached before the litigation starts, can be partial (i.e., it may not necessarily cover all the fiscal year under audit, and can be focused on one or more items under litigation). In cases of settlement during the first-tier judgment, penalties are reduced to 40 per cent of the minimum (on the settled amounts), whereas under the previous system the reduction was to 40 per cent of the charged penalties (i.e., also above minimum). In cases of settlement during the second-tier judgment, penalties are reduced to 50 per cent of the minimum (on the settled amounts).

v Selected issues

Settlements and judicial settlements, as outlined above, shall have a legal basis. Therefore, it is not possible to simply agree a forfeit figure that satisfies both parties from a financial point of view without the terms of the settlement being grounded in the relevant tax provisions.

For transfer pricing disputes, the use of the mutual agreement and arbitration procedures under the EU Arbitration Convention<sup>24</sup> has increased. Since 2010, no penalties are levied in cases of transfer pricing adjustments if certain documentation standards are complied with. In such cases, the Arbitration Convention procedures, which effectively require waiving the domestic litigation, may be particularly appealing, since they guarantee the elimination of double taxation (unlike settlements, if the penalty protection rule does not apply, the Arbitration Convention procedures do not allow a penalty reduction).

The application of the Arbitration Convention may also be useful to bring to the attention of the central tax authorities positions taken by local offices in the course of an audit before the issuance of a tax assessment (indeed, the application may also be filed following a tax audit report, before a tax assessment is issued); in such cases, if the central tax authorities realise that the position taken in the course of an audit cannot be supported during the Arbitration Convention procedures, they can instruct the local office not to issue the tax assessment and close the case.<sup>25</sup>

23 The new rule is applicable as of 1 January 2016, even for pending cases. Before this change, the judicial settlement was possible only during the first-tier judgment.

24 Convention on the elimination of double taxation in connection with the adjustment of profit of the associated enterprises (90/463/EEC).

25 In the event that the request for the application of the Arbitration Convention procedure is subsequent to the starting of the litigation, the judge suspends the trial according to the joint request of both parties.

vi Prevention of potential litigation

To prevent potential litigation, several tax ruling procedures are available.

With Legislative Decree No. 156/2015, the entire system of the tax ruling procedures was rationalised and simplified. The new rules are effective as of 1 January 2016.

In the modified system, rulings are grouped into the following categories:

- a* on the correct interpretation of rules that are objectively uncertain and on the correct characterisation of certain situations for the purposes of specific rules;
- b* on the existence of the conditions for the application of special tax regimes and the validity of the elements of proof to support such conditions;
- c* on the applicability of the general anti-abuse rule to a specific case; and
- d* on the possibility of not applying specific anti-abuse clauses contained in certain rules.

The most important change is that the new rules provide that for all types of ruling (whereas in the previous regime for most types of ruling no mandatory deadline was applicable), the Revenue Agency has a limited time frame of 120 days to reply (except for rulings on interpretation of rules or characterisation of specific situations for which the time frame is 90 days). In the event of no reply by such deadline, the ruling as proposed by the taxpayer will be deemed implicitly accepted. Such time period may be interrupted in the case of requests of additional documentation by the Revenue Agency (with an extension of 60 days from receipt of the documentation).

Furthermore, ruling applications will no longer be mandatory except for certain requests of waiver of specific anti-avoidance rules (such as net operating loss carry-forward limitations for mergers). This is a significant change in comparison with the past when, for almost all cases (controlled foreign corporation (CFC) rules, adjusted current earnings), the filing of a ruling application was mandatory to gain access to a specific regime.

The above changes do not affect advance pricing agreements covering transfer pricing issues, permanent establishment (PE) cases, patent box or new investments that are subject to a separate specific procedure.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Legislative Decree No. 128 of 5 August 2015 entirely reviews, with effect from 1 October 2015, the set of anti-avoidance rules and abuse doctrine, and introduces a single legal definition of ‘abuse of law’ that will replace all definitions and doctrines previously developed (quite extensively) by the tax authorities and endorsed by case law.

The new discipline of the abuse of law is placed in new Article 10-bis of Law 27 July 2000, No. 212 (Taxpayer’s Bill of Rights) and will repeal Article 37-bis of Presidential Decree 29 September 1973, No. 600 (a quasi-general anti-avoidance provision).

Based on this rule: ‘One or more business operations are deemed to be abusive of law when they are deprived of any economic substance and, while formally consistent with tax law, they are aimed at obtaining undue tax advantages.’

New Article 10-bis specifies that:

- a* business operations are deemed to be deprived of economic substance when they consist in facts, contracts or deeds, even in connection with each other, that are unsuitable to generate significant legal effects different from the tax saving;

- b* undue tax advantages consist in tax benefits, even incurred in the long run, obtained in contrast with the purpose of the tax rules or with the principles of the tax legal system;
- c* any business operation is not considered to be abusive when it is justified by sound non-tax reasons that are not negligible. Such reasons include managerial or organisational reasons aimed at improving the structure or functionality of the business or of the professional activity of the taxpayer; and
- d* the taxpayer is always free to choose between different alternative tax regimes provided by the law or between different business transactions leading to a different tax burden.

A new rule provides that the taxpayer may always ask for a preliminary ruling under Article 11 of the same Taxpayer's Bill of Rights to know whether the business transactions he or she wishes to undertake could be considered as an abuse of law (see above).

The last two paragraphs of the new Article 10-bis introduce two relevant provisions. In particular, the abuse of law can be challenged only if the tax benefits cannot be challenged by other tax provisions; and the last paragraph provides for the non-criminal relevance of abusive conduct while the administrative penalties remain applicable.

The new Article 10-bis will apply also with reference to transactions entered into before the entry into force of the Legislative Decree provided that the notice of assessment has not already been served.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

In interpreting double taxation treaties, Italian courts and tax authorities pay little attention to foreign case law and practice.<sup>26</sup> There is also a general tendency of courts and tax authorities not to rely on EU law. Indeed, courts are quite reluctant to rule a case on the basis of EU law and to refer cases to the ECJ. The Supreme Court has expressed its hope that the lower courts will more often apply EU law, or refer cases to the ECJ in the event of doubts on the compatibility of domestic provisions with EU law.<sup>27</sup>

The Supreme Court generally recognises that treaty provisions cannot generate a tax claim that does not exist under domestic law. In a few isolated cases, however, the Supreme Court has taken the surprising view that, if Italian domestic provisions exempt an item of income but the treaty allocates exclusive taxing rights to Italy, treaty provisions trigger the taxation of income in Italy despite the lack of a tax claim under domestic law.<sup>28</sup>

The notion of PE was broadly interpreted by case law. For instance, in Philip Morris,<sup>29</sup> the Supreme Court held that the mere attendance of representatives of a local affiliated company (with no power of representation) at the negotiation of contracts between a foreign affiliated company and a resident entity qualifies as the exercise of ‘the authority to conclude contracts in the name of’ the foreign company.

In 2005, the OECD commentary was amended to reflect the opposite interpretation, but Italy inserted an observation to the commentary to clarify that the Italian jurisprudence is not to be ignored. The interpretation in Philip Morris was confirmed in subsequent case law, which invoked the Italian observation.<sup>30</sup>

The OECD Partnership Report is generally followed by tax authorities and case law. However, in one case, the Supreme Court seems to have rejected the principles of the Report by holding that dividends paid by an Italian-resident company to a US partnership with Japanese partners cannot qualify for the Japan–Italy treaty on withholding taxes, despite the fact that the partnership was fiscally transparent under both Japanese and US law (the Supreme Court seems to take the view that the aforementioned treaty may not apply, as the dividends are not ‘paid’ to the Japanese partners).<sup>31</sup>

X AREAS OF FOCUS

A significant area of litigation is transfer pricing. The case law highlights a unique approach followed by some Italian courts, including the Supreme Court:<sup>32</sup> according to this approach, transfer pricing provisions are qualified as anti-abuse provisions and are regarded as applicable only to the extent to which the tax authorities prove that the income is subject to a more favourable regime in the foreign jurisdiction, as compared with the Italian tax burden. In recent transfer pricing adjustments, the tax authorities started to make secondary adjustments, requalifying the excessive outbound payment as either a dividend subject to withholding tax or an interest-generating loan. The tax authorities have begun litigation in several cases relating to the capital inadequacy of the Italian PEs of foreign banks (and companies),<sup>33</sup> and tend to follow the OECD quasi-thin capitalisation or regulatory minimum capital approach; in this regard, it is worth mentioning that recent legislation provides for a reference to the OECD methodologies to compute the free capital attributable to PEs (implementing provisions are awaited).

Case law and the tax authorities tend to adopt quite an aggressive approach in assessing PEs of foreign companies hidden at the premises of their Italian-affiliated companies (see Section IX, supra). A recent pattern of PE assessments involves Italian commissionaires of foreign principals.<sup>34</sup> In PE assessments, the tax authorities tend to take the view that the profits attributable to the alleged PEs are equal to the gross proceeds derived from sales in the Italian market without any deduction for costs, and the deduction of costs is achieved only through strenuous challenge to the tax authorities.

Several cases have been triggered by assessments of the Italian residence of foreign holding companies, particularly of the extent to which they are controlled by Italian residents. Recently, the tax authorities assessed the withholding tax applicable to outbound dividends (dividends paid to a resident company are not subject to withholding tax) in relation to dividends paid to companies that qualify as Italian tax-resident under domestic law since they have their legal seat in Italy but their seat of administration and main purpose located outside Italy (the latter two criteria being the alternative criteria for Italian tax residence under domestic law).

Several cases were triggered by the denial of the deduction of interest expenses incurred in merger leveraged buyout transactions carried out by foreign investors through an Italian vehicle funded with third-party debt. The claim of the tax authorities is generally grounded on either transfer pricing provisions (maintaining that the Italian vehicle must charge the foreign investor for an amount equal to the interest expenses incurred) or the lack of any benefit from the interest expenses for the Italian vehicle (the interest expenses are regarded as beneficial to the foreign investor) or the abuse of law provisions or principles.<sup>35</sup> However, in March 2016, the Italian Revenue Agency issued a Circular Letter<sup>36</sup> changing the approach held so far. In particular, the Italian Revenue Agency clarified that interest expenses accrued to the Italian vehicle should be generally deductible (unless the specific features of the transaction indicate that it is abusive; in this regard, the tax authorities mentioned, as an example, the case of lack of change of control). The Italian Revenue Agency invited the local offices to revise the notices of assessment already served to the taxpayers.

Other areas of focus include the treaty beneficial ownership condition,<sup>37</sup> the abuse of the Parent–Subsidiary Directive through the interposition of EU parent companies controlled by non-EU shareholders and the deduction of payments to blacklisted jurisdictions.

34 In favour of the taxpayer, see Provincial Tax Court of Milan, Chamber XLVII, Judgment No. 6464 of 2 July 2014; Regional Tax Court of Lombardy, Chamber XLIV, Judgment No. 1520 of 29 March 2014; Chamber II, Judgment No. 125 of 20 October 2011; Chamber XXXIV, Judgment No. 137 of 2 December 2009; Regional Tax Court of Tuscany, Chamber XXXV, Judgment No. 64 of 13 January 2014; and Supreme Court, Tax Chamber, Judgment No. 3769 of 9 March 2012, although the Court decided on the basis of a procedural matter.

35 In Judgment No. 24434 of 30 October 2013, the Supreme Court took the view that the deductibility depends on whether the overall transaction is aimed at allowing the foreign investor to realise the capital gain by selling the shares of the Italian vehicle, whether the debt of the Italian vehicle is repaid with funds originating from the foreign investor and whether the interest expenses may be regarded as beneficial to the activity carried out by the Italian vehicle; the case was referred back to the Regional Tax Court for it to take a decision based on these principles set out by the Supreme Court.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Law No. 23 of 11 March 2014 enabled the government to reform most of the Italian tax law system. To give effect to the indication contained in this Law, the aforementioned legislative decrees have been already approved, in particular:

- a* Legislative Decree No. 128/2015 introducing a specific definition of the ‘abuse of law’ principle;
- b* Legislative Decree No. 156/2015 regarding the reform of tax ruling and tax litigation procedures; and
- c* Legislative Decree No. 158/2015 on the reform of administrative and criminal penalties.

In this context, Legislative Decree No. 147 of 14 September 2015 and Legislative Decree No. 159 of 24 September 2015 have been also approved.

Legislative Decree No. 147 amended the rules governing international taxation to make them more competitive. These new rules are focused in particular on the following issues:

- a* the rationalisation of the CFC rules;
- b* the replacement of existing ‘blacklist cost’ rules;
- c* rules about fiscal units between Italian sister companies controlled by a non-resident company;
- d* the introduction of an optional all-in all-out ‘foreign branch exemption’ regime; and
- e* a redefinition of the interest deduction rules for Italian groups controlling foreign entities.

Legislative Decree No. 159 of 24 September 2015 concerns the rationalisation of the collection system.

LIECHTENSTEIN

Heinz Frommelt and Angelo Trebo<sup>1</sup>

I INTRODUCTION

Liechtenstein is a constitutional hereditary monarchy on a democratic and parliamentary basis and has been a sovereign state since 1806. The state authority is shared between the Prince and the people of Liechtenstein. The state in its current form is based on the Constitution enacted in 1921. In 1924, Liechtenstein adopted the Swiss franc as official currency and became part of the Swiss customs area. Liechtenstein has been a member of the European Economic Area (EEA) since 1995.

Until 2011, taxation in Liechtenstein was governed by the Tax Act of 1961, which provided for a wealth tax and ancillary income tax for individuals as well as a capital and corporate income tax for legal entities. Foundations or trusts with settlors or beneficiaries resident in Liechtenstein were usually considered as transparent for tax purposes and were subsequently also subject to wealth tax. In addition, a coupon tax was levied on certain dividend distributions by legal entities and certain interest payments, and a capital gains tax was levied on the sale of real estate located in Liechtenstein. Further, the Tax Act provided for an estate tax as well as an inheritance and gift tax. Moreover, legal entities qualifying as holding companies (including foundations) as well as entities having merely their registered seat in Liechtenstein without exercising any commercial activity in the country (domiciliary companies) were subject to a privileged taxation. The same applied to trusts registered in Liechtenstein. Finally, a lump sum taxation was available for foreign individuals resident in Liechtenstein who had no occupation in the country and no income from Liechtenstein sources.

In 2010, a new Tax Act and a new Tax Ordinance were enacted with effect from 1 January 2011. The new Tax Act 2010 brought some radical changes to the Liechtenstein taxation system, in particular for legal entities, since the capital tax on equity was abolished and a unitary corporate income tax was introduced for all legal entities. The coupon tax and estate tax, as well as the inheritance and gift tax, have all been abolished. In lieu of the inheritance and gift tax, a new endowment tax applicable upon transfer of assets to a legal entity considered as opaque for tax purposes with a settlor or beneficiaries resident in Liechtenstein has been introduced.

Taxes are levied on a state and municipal level in Liechtenstein. Income of resident individuals is taxed at a progressive rate, with applicable allowances depending on the taxable base and the marital status of the taxpayer. Spouses are generally assessed jointly, unless they both request a separate assessment. Wealth tax is calculated through a notional interest on the taxable assets at a current rate of 4 per cent, which is then added to the taxable income base. In the case of individuals and legal entities subject to wealth taxation (basically foundations or trusts with settlors or beneficiaries resident in Liechtenstein), a state tax rate of currently a maximum of 8 per cent is levied on the taxable base. The figure is then further multiplied by a percentage rate depending on the municipality of residency of the taxpayer. The multiplier ranges between 150 and 250 per cent, and can be determined individually by each municipality on an annual basis. Currently, the highest multiplier imposed by a Liechtenstein municipality is 200 per cent.

The possibility for foreign individuals resident in Liechtenstein with no occupation in the country and no income from Liechtenstein sources to obtain lump sum taxation remains unchanged under the new Tax Act.

The new Tax Act 2010 abolished the privileged taxation of holding and domiciliary companies. All legal entities with a registered seat or place of effective management in Liechtenstein are currently subject to full corporate income tax liability at a rate of 12.5 per cent with a minimum income tax of 1,200 Swiss francs per year. Legal entities set up before 2010 and formerly subject to privileged taxation were granted a three-year transition period until the end of 2013. Unwilling to completely give up the former taxation regime, the legislator has introduced a new special tax regime for legal entities qualifying as 'private asset structures' (basically a vehicle – very often a private foundation – used for the management of an individual's private wealth without pursuing an economic activity). Due to Liechtenstein's membership in the EEA, the new private asset structure tax regime was examined by the European Free Trade Association Surveillance Authority and declared by the same to be in compliance with the applicable European competition and state aid rules. A new notional interest deduction as well as an attractive IP-box regime were also introduced for legal entities subject to tax in Liechtenstein. The IP-box regime was abolished with effect as of 1 January 2017 because it was deemed to be non-compliant with base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS). Companies making use of this tax regime in financial year 2016 will be grandfathered for their IP income until calendar year 2020. Further, a tax group is possible with a parent subject to full taxation in Liechtenstein and group members subject to tax in Liechtenstein or abroad.

Partnerships are treated as transparent for tax purposes, and the income generated by the partnership is thus taxed directly in the hands of each partner. In relation to partners who are resident individuals, the partnership's assets directly attributable to them are subject to wealth tax.

With respect to investment funds, the Tax Act exempts income generated by the special fund, thereby subjecting only the income generated by the investment company itself to taxation.

Since Liechtenstein is part of the Swiss customs area, the Swiss federal legislation on stamp duties (including formation duties, duties on insurance premiums and securities transfer tax) is directly applicable in Liechtenstein. In those cases where the Swiss federal legislation on stamp duties is not applicable, a special Liechtenstein formation duty or a duty on insurance premiums is levied. Because of the customs area with Switzerland, Liechtenstein also applies the Swiss VAT regime, and Liechtenstein has undertaken to adopt the material Swiss VAT provisions. Liechtenstein has thus enacted its own VAT Act (2009) and a VAT Ordinance (2009), which are modelled upon the Swiss legal basis.

Litigation in tax matters was rare in Liechtenstein in the past. This was largely due to the fact that a great portion of the Liechtenstein legal entities were subject to privileged taxation, and resident individuals, as well as legal entities subject to ordinary taxation, would rather address uncertain questions with the Tax Authority by way of advance rulings. These rulings are still widely used in daily practice. Since the new Tax Act 2010 came into force, litigation cases have increased considerably, although the number of cases still remains low compared to the total number of taxpayers (individuals and legal entities).<sup>2</sup> The penalties imposed for violations of tax provisions have also increased over the past few years.

i Initiation of the tax assessment procedure

Each individual subject to tax in Liechtenstein has a duty to file a tax return in relation to income and wealth taxes on a self-assessment basis before a deadline set annually by the (central) Tax Authority in Vaduz and announced publicly. The same applies to legal entities subject to tax in Liechtenstein in relation to corporate income tax. The deadlines are usually set around April following the relevant tax year for individuals, and around July for legal entities. Tax returns must be lodged by individuals either with the tax department of the municipality where they reside, or directly with the Tax Authority, or alternatively by means of electronic filing. Tax returns of legal entities must be lodged directly with the Tax Authority or by means of electronic filing. Trusts with no income from real estate located in Liechtenstein and without a permanent establishment in Liechtenstein are subject to only the minimum income tax of currently 1,200 Swiss francs<sup>3</sup> and are not required to file a tax return. The same applies to private asset structures. Income generated by a partnership attributable to individual partners must be declared by the same in their own tax return along with, if applicable, any assets of the partnership attributable to the partner for wealth tax purposes.

With respect to capital gains tax on real estate, endowment tax as well as Liechtenstein formation duty and the duty on insurance premiums, the public authority involved in the transaction (e.g., the Land Register, the Commercial Register) has the duty to inform the Tax Authority directly about the executed transaction (e.g., sale of real estate, formation of a legal entity), which then issues a tax assessment notice thereupon. In the case of endowment tax and the duty on insurance premiums, the notification to the Tax Authority must be lodged by the endowing party and respectively by the Liechtenstein fiscal representative of the insurance company.

ii Issuance of the tax assessment notice

After the tax return is lodged, it is reviewed by a tax commissioner and a tax assessment notice is issued by the Tax Authority. Prior to that, the taxpayer has the duty to fully cooperate with the Tax Authority to enable a full and accurate assessment. This includes, for example, providing oral or written information, and submitting accounting documents, ledgers and other documents deemed necessary. The tax assessment notice has to contain the taxable base, the tax rate and the tax amount due. Likewise, a tax assessment notice is issued by the Tax Authority in the case of capital gains tax on real estate, endowment tax, formation duty or duty on insurance premiums. If a taxpayer fails to file a tax return, or if the taxable base cannot be assessed properly as reliable or complete documentation is missing, the Tax Authority is entitled to assess the tax due at its own discretion by taking into consideration empirical figures, and changes in the taxpayer's wealth and his or her style of living. During the whole tax assessment procedure, the taxpayer has the right to submit any facts, present any evidence and make any request, unless the Tax Act provides to the contrary.<sup>4</sup> The assessed tax becomes due upon service of the tax assessment notice and is generally payable within 30 days after service.

iii Formal complaint with the Tax Authority

In the event of disagreement with the tax assessment notice, a taxpayer has the right to lodge a formal complaint within 30 days upon service with the same tax authority that issued the disputed notice. The complaint must be filed in writing and contain the requests, the grounds for complaint, the evidence offered, and the signature of the taxpayer or of his or her legal counsel. In the complaint, the taxpayer may advance all arguments for legal deficiency of the tax assessment notice, in particular any defectiveness or violation of the law, or that certain facts have not been sufficiently considered in the decision (Article 89 National Administration Act). If the tax assessment notice has been issued by the taxing authority at its own discretion, the taxpayer may only challenge the assessment notice on the grounds of obvious inaccuracy.

If the formal requirements for the complaint are met, the Tax Authority must re-examine the tax assessment notice, and may then either amend the notice in whole or in part or reject the taxpayer's complaint. The Tax Authority has the duty to examine and evaluate the evidence produced by the taxpayer. The taxpayer has the burden of proof in relation to facts that annul or reduce his or her tax liability, and has the right to illustrate and defend his or her complaint in front of the Tax Authority personally and to be heard. If the taxpayer's complaint challenges a tax assessment notice containing detailed reasons, the complaint can be treated upon the taxpayer's request, or with his or her consent, as a formal appeal filed with the State Tax Commission, and must be forwarded to the same for direct decision.

iv Appeal before the State Tax Commission

The Tax Authority's decision pronouncing on the taxpayer's complaint can be appealed by the taxpayer within 30 days of service by filing an appeal before the State Tax Commission. The State Tax Commission is thus the first instance of appeal in tax matters. The procedural rules applicable in the case of a complaint in front of the Tax Authority (written form, content of the pleading, evidence, representation, etc.) are also applicable in the case of an appeal. The appellant has the duty to indicate the defects of the decision appealed, and to substantiate his or her arguments in the notice of appeal.<sup>5</sup> The taxpayer may advance grounds for appeal such as violation of the taxpayer's legal interest protected by the law, or to be protected by the Authority, or because his or her interests have directly been treated in an inappropriate or unfair manner. A tax assessment notice by the Tax Authority issued at its discretion can only be appealed on the grounds of obvious inaccuracy. Differing from the complaint procedure in front of the Tax Authority, there is a limitation of possible evidence that may be used in front of the State Tax Commission: evidence that has not been produced during the assessment or complaint procedure is inadmissible in the appeal procedure in front of the State Tax Commission. Such limitation encourages the taxpayer to present useful evidence to the taxing authority in a straightforward fashion during the assessment or complaint procedure.<sup>6</sup> The Tax Authority is a formal party to the appeal before the State Tax Commission, and has the right to file a counterstatement to the taxpayer's notice of appeal. In the same way as the taxpayer, the Tax Authority has the right to present and defend its arguments before the State Tax Commission.

The State Tax Commission has the right to engage experts, make inspections, request written or oral information from the taxpayer, request confirmations by the same, or inspect his or her books and ledger accounts. If the Commission exercises such right and the taxpayer refuses to comply, the appeal must be rejected as unfounded. Potential consequences for punishment under criminal or administrative law remain reserved.

The State Tax Commission can annul the Tax Authority's decision or remit the matter to the Tax Authority for taking new or further evidence, reconsidering and re-deciding. The tax initially assessed by the Tax Authority remains due and payable irrespective of the taxpayer's decision to appeal the assessment notice.

v Appeal before the Administrative Court

A decision of the State Tax Commission can be appealed to the Administrative Court as second-instance authority within 30 days of service of the Commission's decision. The appeal can be filed by either the Tax Authority or the taxpayer. The Tax Authority is, therefore, in each case a party to the appeal. If the taxpayer is the appealing party, the Tax Authority has the right to file a counterstatement. In front of the Administrative Court, the appellant can assert only a violation of the law or argue that the appealed decision has been rendered on the grounds of facts assessed incompletely or upon facts contrary to the records contained in the taxpayer's file. A complaint on the consideration of evidence and on the facts already fully assessed by the lower authorities is not admissible in front of the Administrative Court.<sup>7</sup> The notice of appeal must contain the grounds of appeal, the request, the matters of fact and the evidence offered. A mere reference to the grounds of appeal contained in the appeal filed at a lower level (e.g., in front of the State Tax Commission) is inadmissible and leads to the rejection of the appeal.<sup>8</sup> Contrary to the appeal in front of the Commission, new or further evidence may still be produced in front of the Administrative Court. The appellant must duly denote which parts of the appealed decision are challenged and duly substantiate his or her appeal, otherwise it will be declared inadmissible. The Administrative Court may schedule ex officio a hearing of the parties, take new evidence or even start the whole assessment procedure from scratch.

The Administrative Court renders a ruling that is final, unless a further appeal to the Constitutional Court is possible on constitutional grounds.

vi Appeal before the Constitutional Court

If the taxpayer considers that the final decision of the Administrative Court violates his or her basic rights granted by the Constitution or by the European Convention on Human Rights, to which Liechtenstein is a party, a constitutional appeal may be filed. Such appeal must be filed within four weeks of service or can be filed without notice in cases of the effective immediate violation of the appellant's rights. Generally, the appeal has no suspensory effect. However, if enforcement of the appealed decision would trigger a disproportionate inconvenience to the appellant, and provided there are no overriding public interests, the President of the Constitutional Court can suspend the enforcement upon the appellant's request.

vii Appeal in VAT and Swiss stamp duty matters

As in the case of other Liechtenstein taxes, tax assessment notices of the Tax Authority in the field of VAT may be appealed first by way of complaint and further by appeal to the State Tax Commission and the Administrative Court. However, a verdict by the Administrative Court on the matter of VAT may be appealed further within 30 days of service before the Swiss Federal Supreme Court as the competent court in this effect. On VAT matters there is, therefore, an additional third court level available to a Liechtenstein taxpayer liable to VAT. Both the taxpayer and the Liechtenstein Tax Authority have such right of appeal before the Swiss Federal Supreme Court. The appeal is permissible only for reasons of violation of the law, and the procedure is governed by the applicable Swiss rules on appeals in front of the Federal Supreme Court. Decisions relating to VAT offences of criminal nature are excluded from appeals before the Swiss Federal Supreme Court.

With regard to the Swiss federal stamp duties applicable in Liechtenstein, the directly competent assessing authority is the Swiss Federal Tax Authority. Any complaints or appeals by a Liechtenstein taxpayer against notices or orders issued by the mentioned authority must therefore be lodged in front of the competent Swiss authority pursuant to the applicable Swiss procedural rules.

viii Amendment of final tax assessment notices

Once a tax assessment notice has become final, it may still be amended according to the following principles. The Tax Authority has the right to assess a supplementary tax even after the tax assessment notice has become final, but no later than within five years, if facts or pieces of evidence previously unknown to the Tax Authority come up at a later stage and lead to the conclusion that taxation has been wrongfully omitted or that the final tax assessment notice is incomplete (Article 120 Tax Act). Likewise, the taxpayer has the right to request a revision of a final tax assessment notice if material facts or decisive evidence have been discovered, or if the Tax Authority has ignored material facts or decisive evidence that were or should have been known to the same, or if it has otherwise violated essential principles of procedural law (Article 123 Tax Act). The revision can also be initiated ex officio. The taxpayer's request must be filed in writing within 90 days after gaining knowledge of the ground for revision, or at the latest within 10 years after service of the relevant tax assessment notice.

The Tax Act further enables the correction of arithmetical errors or typographical errors in final assessment notices and decisions upon the taxpayer's request or ex officio, at the latest within five years upon service of the notice or decision (Article 125 Tax Act).

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

A taxpayer's formal complaint addressed to the Tax Authority is dealt with and decided by the same authority. The decision procedure is smooth and is usually concluded within a short time. Most disputed cases are resolved at this level.

The State Tax Commission is the first level of appeal, and is composed of five members and three alternate members who are elected by the parliament for a term of four years. Members of government and officials of the Tax Authority and of the municipality's tax department are not eligible for election. The President and Vice-President of the Commission are nominated by parliament and must have legal education. The State Tax Commission usually meets once a month to hear cases. A decision is generally rendered within a couple of months.

The Administrative Court is the second and, unless a motion to the Constitutional Court is permissible, final level of appeal. It consists of a panel of five judges and five alternate judges who are appointed by the Prince. The judges are independent in the exercise of their duties, and subject only to the Constitution and the law. The majority of the judges must be Liechtenstein citizens and have legal education. Each judge's term in office is five years, taking into account that every year one judge must be replaced by a new member. The panel nominates a President and a Vice-President, renewable on an annual basis. A verdict by the Administrative Court is usually rendered within six to 12 months.

The Constitutional Court consists of a panel of five judges and five alternate judges who are appointed by the Prince. The President of the Court and the majority of the judges must be Liechtenstein citizens. In addition, the procedural rules relating to the Administrative Court apply mutatis mutandis. Decisions of the Constitutional Court are generally rendered within six to 12 months.

Due to the applicability of Swiss stamp duty legislation and the Swiss VAT regime, the Swiss Federal Tax Authority in the first case and the Swiss Federal Supreme Court in the second are respectively the competent assessing authority and final judicial authority.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

i Administrative penalties

Misdemeanours are subdivided into violations of procedural duties, jeopardising of duties and tax evasion.

Anyone who, wilfully or negligently and in spite of a reminder, fails to comply with or complies incorrectly with a duty imposed upon the same by the Tax Act, the Tax Ordinance or a decree issued by the Tax Authority on the basis of the Tax Act is punished by a fine of up to 1,000 Swiss francs or, in severe or recurrent cases, up to 10,000 Swiss francs (Article 135 Tax Act).

Unless the actus reus is punishable as tax evasion or tax fraud, anyone who wilfully or negligently jeopardises the levy either of the formation duty or of the duty on insurance premiums is punished by a fine of up to 20,000 Swiss francs. The act committed can consist of a failure to file a tax return, account statements or breakdowns, or to provide information or produce the books, registers or other written evidence; but may also consist of making untrue statements or concealing essential facts in a tax return, account statement or breakdown, or of producing untrue documents about essential facts or of giving false information, or impeding, obstructing or making impossible a regular control (Article 136 Tax Act).

Tax evasion is defined as an act committed by the taxpayer by wilfully or negligently filing an untrue or incomplete tax return, or by impeding the levy of the tax due by giving false or incomplete information or by otherwise culpably keeping back taxes due. The law also considers it as an act of tax evasion when a withholding agent obliged to withhold taxes at source wilfully or negligently fails to withhold the tax in total or in part, or anyone who wilfully or negligently keeps back the formation duty or the duty on insurance premiums for its own benefit or the benefit of others (Article 137 Tax Act). The law also punishes any taxpayer or withholding agent who wilfully or negligently triggers an unlawful reimbursement of a tax or an unlawful exemption from taxes. Tax evasion is punished by a fine, usually two times the amount of the tax evaded. In cases of minor fault, the fine can be reduced down to a third, while in cases of serious fault, the fine can be increased to three times the amount. Attempts to evade taxes are also punished by a fine that corresponds to two-thirds of the fine that would have been imposed in cases of intentional consummation of the misdemeanour. The law further punishes with a fine anyone who instigates or aids and abets a taxpayer to commit a tax evasion, irrespective of whether the taxpayer has ultimately been subject to punishment. If a misdemeanour is committed with effect for a legal entity, the penalty is imposed directly upon the legal entity in accordance with the general administrative penalty rules. If the legal entity fails to pay the fine imposed, the body legally representing the company is liable for the payment of the fine.

The Tax Act attributes the competence to sanction a violation of procedural duties, jeopardising of duties and tax evasion to the municipality where the taxpayer resides, or to the Tax Authority. The taxpayer has the right to appeal a penalty order within 14 days from service, either before the Tax Authority or the State Tax Commission. Decisions of the State Tax Commission can be further appealed before the Administrative Court within 14 days from service.

ii Criminal penalties

Tax fraud and embezzlement of taxes withheld at source are punishable as criminal offences.

Tax fraud is defined as the act of committing tax evasion by wilfully using false, forged or, in terms of content, untrue accounts or other documents. Such criminal act is punished by a prison sentence of up to six months or a penalty of up to 360 daily fines (Article 140 Tax Act). Equally, the Tax Act punishes with a prison sentence of up to six months or a penalty of up to 360 daily fines the act committed by a withholding agent obliged to withhold tax at source who uses the tax withheld for its own benefit or for the benefit of others (Article 141 Tax Act). If tax fraud or the embezzlement of taxes withheld at source is committed by a legal entity, the punishment is imposed upon the body of the entity.

Tax fraud and embezzlement of taxes withheld at source are sanctioned by the Princely Court in Vaduz. Court orders can be appealed before the Court of Appeal pursuant to the rules of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In the case of VAT, the same punishable acts apply as with other taxes, but with different penalties. In addition, the VAT Act contains the punishable crimes of qualified tax evasion (Article 89 VAT Act) and dealing with goods on which VAT has been evaded (Article 90 VAT Act).

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

The Tax Act entitles a taxpayer to recover taxes paid erroneously in whole or in part, on which an interest amount of currently 2 per cent is due if the payment day of the recoverable tax dates back more than 30 days. The application for recovering the overpaid tax must be submitted within five years from the end of the year in which the tax was effectively paid (Article 130 Tax Act).

The refund of taxes acknowledged as overpaid by the Tax Authority is usually smooth and quick. We are not aware of cases where a refund of overpaid tax has been refused or delayed by the Tax Authority.

With respect to VAT, the taxpayer is entitled to obtain a refund in the case of a surplus following the calculation of the VAT effectively due. The taxpayer is further entitled to request repayment of taxes paid, but not due, as long as the tax assessment has not become final (Article 78 VAT Act).

ii Challenging administrative decisions

It is possible to challenge administrative decisions on the grounds illustrated in Section II, supra. Tax provisions are usually enacted with effect going forward. The enactment of tax provisions triggering financial burdens on taxpayers with retroactive effect is generally prohibited unless special circumstances apply. If a tax provision is declared to be in violation of the Constitution, such provision is usually abrogated with effect going forward starting from within a maximum of one year as set by the Constitutional Court, and may thus in certain cases still continue to apply in spite of the verdict.<sup>9</sup>

9 See Constitutional Court StGH 2012/175.

iii Claimants

As a general rule, only the respective taxpayer addressee of the tax assessment notice is entitled to bring a tax claim against the authorities. In the case of a tax group, each member of the group subject to tax in Liechtenstein is obliged to file an individual tax return and will therefore receive an individual tax assessment notice, which may be appealed by the member.

As regards VAT, a taxpayer liable to VAT who thus lodged its VAT return and becomes the addressee of the tax assessment notice is entitled to bring a claim. In the case of a VAT tax group, the group representative lodges the VAT return consolidating the individual VAT accounting of each group member, and will thus be the addressee of the tax assessment notice. Each tax group member is, however, severally and jointly liable for the tax due along with the group representative (Article 15 VAT Act).

VI COSTS

The general rule is that, if a complainant or appellant taxpayer loses a case, the same has to bear the procedural costs, while no costs are imposed if the complaint or appeal is successful. If a complainant or appellant is partially successful, the costs payable are reduced in relation to the degree of success. Even if a complainant or appellant has succeeded with a complaint or appeal, the same can be ordered to bear the costs if the complaint or appeal proceeding has been initiated for no reason. The same principles apply for proceedings in front of the Administrative Court. No costs are awarded to taxpayers for attorneys' fees or expenses even in cases where they prevail and regardless of the procedural level.

In the case of disputes involving VAT, the Tax Authority is entitled to order the payment of costs for its own decrees and decisions in whole or in part. If, following a complaint, the same is rejected, the taxpayer is usually ordered to bear the costs of the rejecting decision. A proportional reduction of the costs is due if the taxpayer is partially successful. If the complaint has been initiated for no reason, the succeeding taxpayer can nevertheless be ordered to pay the costs in whole or in part. Costs of investigations can be imposed upon such person who has culpably triggered them, irrespective of the outcome of the proceedings. For VAT proceedings before the Administrative Court, the same principles as with other taxes apply. As with other taxes, no costs for attorneys' fees or expenses are awarded to the taxpayer even in cases where they prevail.

The administrative cost for the granting advance rulings usually ranges between 500 and 2,000 Swiss francs.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Liechtenstein law does not provide for a legal mechanism of alternative dispute resolution with the Tax Authority. Nor does the EU Arbitration Convention apply, since Liechtenstein is not a Member State of the EU.

However, Liechtenstein has a long tradition of advance rulings, which continue to be part of dealings with the Tax Authority. Advance rulings are granted by the Tax Authority in relation to facts leading to taxation not yet realised at the time of requesting the ruling and provided the taxpayer has a special interest due to a foreseeable relevance of the envisaged legal effects. Tax rulings may be requested by individuals and legal entities, partnerships and trusts as well as any other person having a legitimate interest in obtaining the confirmation of the tax assessment even if the taxable event will be realised by a legal entity, partnership or trust not yet set up at the time of application. Advance rulings have a binding legal effect with regard to the Tax Authority – in other words, in the assessment and potential complaint procedure before the Tax Authority – but have no binding legal effect in front of the upper court levels. The State Tax Commission or the Administrative Court may therefore quash the effects of a ruling. As of 1 January 2017, a new legal provision setting out the framework and effects of advance rulings will be introduced.

The binding effect of advance rulings is subject to the proviso that the facts assessed remain unchanged or depart to an immaterial extent, and the legal provisions ruled on are not amended. Advance rulings can also be obtained in relation to transfer pricing issues (advance pricing agreements) and are granted for a limited duration.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

The Tax Act 2010 introduced an anti-avoidance provision, which was previously unknown in Liechtenstein. Article 3 of the Tax Act now enables the Tax Authority to disregard a legal tax planning or an arrangement in fact that is deemed abusive. Such can be the case if the planning is deemed inadequate in relation to its economic circumstances and if its only aim is to obtain a tax advantage, which would otherwise collide with the rationale of the Tax Act and which has no valid economic or other non-tax reasons for its implementation. All the mentioned requirements must be met to affirm the application of the anti-avoidance provision.

In a case of 2013, the Administrative Court applied the new anti-avoidance principle and ruled against a medical doctor resident in Liechtenstein who had restructured his medical business activity by setting up a company limited by shares, of which he became the owner and an employee. Before that, the doctor had run his medical business as a self-employed person, and all his income had been taxed as income from self-employment. The Court ruled that, while the structuring of the medical business by using a company limited by shares and the conclusion of an employment agreement with the doctor's company were not deemed abusive, the doctor had violated Article 3 of the Tax Act by agreeing an employee's wage that was too low when compared with the average annual income generated by the doctor in the past as self-employed person.<sup>10</sup> The judgment has recently been challenged in front of the Constitutional Court and is currently still pending. So far, this judgment remains the only published court decision dealing with the new anti-avoidance provision.

With regard to VAT, it is worth mentioning a decision by the Swiss Federal Supreme Court of 2013, which was preceded by a dispute between the Liechtenstein Tax Authority and a Liechtenstein establishment. The Swiss court – as competent supreme authority in VAT matters relating to Liechtenstein – held that the Liechtenstein establishment had abused the VAT regime, and ruled against the establishment by ordering the retroactive cancellation of the establishment from the VAT register (thus invalidating the establishment's VAT number) and disallowing the deduction of VAT input tax.<sup>11</sup> The Court acknowledged abusive behaviour of the taxpayer on the ground of its effective business activities – in other words, the purchase of luxury cars by deducting the input tax and only partial lending to paying third parties, while mainly making the cars available without consideration to parties related to the owner of the establishment.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

Until recently, Liechtenstein had only concluded DTTs with Austria (1969) and Switzerland (1995, revised 2015). Since 2009, Liechtenstein has signed and ratified a growing number of new DTTs that have mainly been modelled upon the OECD Model Tax Convention on Income and Capital. New DTTs have been signed with Luxembourg (2009), San Marino (2009), Uruguay (2010), Hong Kong SAR PRC (2010), Germany (2011), Bahrain (2012), the United Kingdom (2012), Singapore (2013), Malta (2013), Guernsey (2014), the Czech Republic (2014), Georgia (2015), Hungary (2015), the UAE (2015), Andorra (2015) and Iceland (2016).<sup>12</sup> Other treaties are under negotiation. All DTTs concluded by Liechtenstein contain a mutual agreement procedure clause that has, in most cases, been established in accordance with the OECD standard.

For historical reasons, there is very little case law on the application and interpretation of DTTs in Liechtenstein. So far, there has been only one published decision dealing with a DTT to which Liechtenstein is a party. In a 2009 case pertaining to the DTT with Austria, the Administrative Court ruled that Article 23 of that DTT explicitly provides for a tax progression clause for the state of residence of the taxpayer, but does not exclude such tax progression for the state of source. Therefore, the Court held that an individual tax resident of Austria is subject to the tax progression clause applicable by Liechtenstein tax law in relation to his or her income and assets subject to taxation in Liechtenstein.<sup>13</sup>

X AREAS OF FOCUS

The case regarding the new anti-avoidance provision illustrated in Section VIII, supra, is an absolute novelty in the tax jurisprudence of the Liechtenstein courts. Given the recent introduction of the concept of anti-avoidance in the Liechtenstein legal order and the rather strict application of the provision by the Administrative Court, it may safely be assumed that the Tax Authority will likely scrutinise future tax planning schemes more deeply from an anti-avoidance point of view.

12 Some of the signed DTTs have not yet come into force pending ratification.

13 See Administrative Court VGH 2008/147.

Moreover, since the transitional provisions applicable to former holding and domiciliary companies elapsed on 1 January 2014, thus subjecting all those legal entities to the new Tax Act, it is to be expected that controlling of tax rules by and enforcement against corporate taxpayers will increase compared to the past. Notably, private asset structures may become a bigger target of control regarding whether the entity meets the legal requirements for the privileged tax regime, and whether the declarations rendered upon application are being respected and implemented. In this regard, the Administrative Court rendered its first decision on the private asset structure regime in April 2015 in a case where a foundation, which holds folk art collections lent free of charge to the foundation's underlying company, had requested to be taxed as a private asset structure.<sup>14</sup> The Court clarified when an economic activity is deemed to be exercised by a legal entity for tax purposes, and held that the foundation's activity at stake (the lending of folk art collections) and the holding of a participation in an underlying company are not deemed as economic activities for the purposes of the private asset structure regime, even if the participation equals 100 per cent and the underlying company itself exercises a commercial activity. An inadmissible economic activity is deemed only when the shareholder's participation is linked to or triggers influence in the underlying company.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Due to the increasing number of DTTs signed by Liechtenstein since 2009, and following the enactment of the new Tax Act 2010, tax issues have come to the forefront of the Liechtenstein legal agenda. As a result, tax disputes have increased considerably over the past few years, although their number still remains low compared to the number of resident taxpayers and to the overall number of litigation cases in courts. The Tax Authority has seemingly started to interpret and enforce tax provisions in a stricter manner than in the past, which may be one of the reasons for the higher number of tax disputes. The trend of the judiciary is less clear, but seems likely to move towards applying greater rigour.

Since its enactment, the Tax Act 2010 has already been revised a few times, partially for clear fiscal reasons and partially in view of clearing out certain ambiguous provisions. With effect from 1 January 2017, several provisions of the Tax Act were amended with a view to implementing four of the 15 BEPS Action Points in Liechtenstein: 'correspondence principle' for dividends, exchange of tax rulings, abolition of the IP-box regime, introduction of transfer pricing rules, country-by-country reporting and anti-treaty abuse rules. In addition, from 2017 onwards, the minimum income tax for legal entities will increase up to 1,800 Swiss francs per annum. A revision of the notional interest deduction regime, as well as of the assessment base of assets for wealth tax purposes, on which discussions have been led by parliament and the government for some time, are also likely to remain subjects of discussion for some time to come.

MEXICO

I INTRODUCTION

Under Mexican jurisdiction, tax disputes between taxpayers and the tax authorities are very common. In those disputes, taxpayers first try to solve disputes through meetings held with the tax authorities; however, it is common that the parties do not agree, so taxpayers usually need to start procedures to challenge an assessment or a tax refund denial.<sup>2</sup>

The Mexican tax authorities usually start audit procedures, with all types of taxpayers, when they detect such taxpayers have failed to pay all the taxes they should have, and they end with a tax assessment. Regarding tax refunds, it is important to point out that in recent years, the tax authorities have denied such refunds in a very visible manner, mainly regarding value added tax refunds.

When the tax authorities determine a tax assessment or deny a tax refund, it is very common for taxpayers to end up with a litigation, for which it may take around three years to obtain a final decision. The fees and costs of such litigations may vary taking into consideration the amounts of the assessments or tax refunds, if the respective lawyer works by him or herself or in a firm, and the prestige of such firm.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Once a tax assessment is determined or a tax refund is denied, taxpayers have the opportunity to challenge the ruling that contains the tax assessment or the tax refund denial. There are two legal remedies available for purposes of challenging rulings, which are set out below.

1 Manuel Sáinz Orantes is a partner and Claudio F Cárdenas Salomon is an associate at Chevez Ruiz Zamarripa y Cia, SC.

2 There are also other causes for tax disputes, such as fines, but tax assessments and tax refunds are the most common, so we will focus on them in this chapter.

i Administrative appeal

At first instance, taxpayers have the option of filing an administrative appeal within a 30 business-day term as of the date the ruling is notified.

It is important to point out that the First Division of the Supreme Court of Justice issued a criterion in which it stated that taxpayers were required to offer the necessary evidence during an audit procedure; otherwise, they would be barred from offering new evidence if they challenge the tax assessment before the Federal Administrative Court through an annulment complaint.

In terms of such criterion, if a taxpayer wishes to offer additional evidence to the tax authorities than that provided during the audit procedure, the taxpayer must first file an administrative appeal to be allowed to offer such evidence before the tax authorities.

In accordance with this criterion, in the event that taxpayers intend to offer evidence additional to that submitted during the audit procedure, they must first file an administrative appeal to be in a position to do so.

In the event of an unfavourable resolution, taxpayers are entitled to file an annulment complaint against the Federal Administrative Court within a 30-business-day term as of the date the resolution of the administrative appeal is notified.

ii Annulment complaint

The other way to challenge an unfavourable resolution is by filing an annulment complaint before the Federal Administrative Court within a 30-business-day term as of the date the ruling is notified to the taxpayer.

Against a favourable or unfavourable resolution, the tax authorities or the taxpayers may respectively file an appeal or an amparo complaint before a collegiate tribunal within a 15-business-day term as of the date the decision is notified.

iii Amparo complaint or tax authorities appeal

The amparo complaint is filed by taxpayers before a collegiate tribunal to challenge decisions issued by the Federal Administrative Court within a 15-business-day term as of the date the decision is notified.

The tax authorities can also file an appeal challenging the decision issued by the Federal Administrative Court within a 15-business-day term as of the date the decision is notified, and it is also solved by a collegiate tribunal.

In cases where taxpayers file an amparo complaint and the tax authorities also file the respective appeal, the same collegiate tribunal will solve them in the same session.

iv Extraordinary appeal

It is important to point out that the parties may file an extraordinary appeal within a 10-business-day term challenging the decisions issued by a collegiate tribunal while solving an amparo complaint only to argue that an article violates the Constitution or human rights.

Such extraordinary appeal is solved by the Supreme Court of Justice, which decides if the matter is transcendent and important before admitting the extraordinary appeal.

v Guarantee

In accordance with the Federal Tax Code, if an administrative appeal is filed before the tax authorities, taxpayers will not have to offer any security to guarantee the tax assessment until the tax authorities rule on the administrative appeal.

However, in the event that an annulment complaint is filed challenging a tax assessment or once the administrative appeal is solved unfavourably to the taxpayers' interests, it would be necessary to offer a guarantee for purposes of securing the tax assessment.

Taxpayers must secure it as follows:

- a* cash deposit;
- b* security interest or mortgage;
- c* security bond granted by an authorised institution;
- d* joint and several liability assumed by a third party;
- e* administrative-law attachment; and
- f* securities or loan portfolios.

Finally, it is important to mention that there is no significant difference in the dispute if the tax assessments or tax refunds correspond to personal, corporate or partnership taxes.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Administrative appeals

As previously mentioned, the tax authorities are in charge of solving administrative appeals that taxpayers may file against an assessment or a tax refund denial.

In fact, there is a special legal section that is part of the Mexican tax authorities that is in charge of solving administrative appeals. The persons in charge of solving such appeals are tax authorities' officers depending on the tax residence of the taxpayer.

Such appeals take approximately six months to be solved (it may take more or less time depending on how difficult it is to study the appeal); however, under the Federal Tax Code, if the tax authorities do not issue a decision within a three-month term, taxpayers may choose to take such omission as an unfavourable negative decision and proceed to challenge it, or wait until a formal decision is issued.

In practice, it is unlikely that taxpayers will obtain favourable decisions at this stage, unless they prove that during the audit procedure the tax authorities did not analyse all the evidence that was submitted, or even when taxpayers submit evidence during the appeal additional to that submitted during the audit procedure. This is the case because, as previously mentioned, the Supreme Court of Justice issued a criterion in which it established that evidence that was not provided during the audit procedure can only be provided while filing the administrative appeal.

ii Annulment complaints

Annulment complaints are solved by the Federal Administrative Court, which is integrated by three collegiate judges. It may take around a year for the Federal Administrative Court to issue its first instance decision. However, the parties are entitled to challenge such decision through an amparo complaint (taxpayers) or an appeal (tax authorities), which will be resolved by a collegiate tribunal.

It is common to offer as evidence a tax opinion issued by a certified public accountant in the annulment complaints filed to challenge a tax assessment or a tax refund denial. However, this depends on the specific case, and what the taxpayer needs to prove to demonstrate the illegality of the assessment or the origin of the tax refund.

When such expert opinion is offered as evidence, the parties (taxpayer and tax authorities) should appoint an accountant expert who will be in charge of such opinion. In the event such opinions differ, the Federal Administrative Court must appoint a third-party expert whose opinion will prevail.

iii Amparo complaint or tax authorities appeal

Amparo complaints or a tax authorities' appeal is resolved by a collegiate tribunal, which is integrated by three judges.

It usually takes around seven months for collegiate tribunals to issue their decisions, which can only be challenged through an extraordinary appeal.

iv Extraordinary appeal

As previously mentioned, the parties may file an extraordinary appeal challenging the decisions issued by a collegiate tribunal only to argue that an article violates the Constitution or human rights.

Such extraordinary appeal is solved by the Supreme Court of Justice, which is integrated by 11 judges divided into two sections. Such judges issue their decisions by sections (first and second sections) or in a full seating.

Regarding tax assessments and tax refunds, only a few matters end up in an extraordinary appeal before the Supreme Court of Justice, since they are mainly solved with the amparo complaint or the authorities' appeal before a collegiate tribunal.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Under Mexican legislation, tax disputes usually conclude with a final decision that determines the legality or illegality of a tax assessment or a tax refund.

If the decision is favourable to a taxpayer, the tax authorities will annul the assessment. In cases where the taxpayer had already paid the assessment, the tax authorities will refund the taxes with adjustments for inflation, surcharges and fines. If the matter is a tax refund, the tax authorities will refund the taxes with adjustments for inflation and surcharges.

In the event that the decision is unfavourable to the taxpayer regarding tax assessments, the taxpayer will have to pay such assessment to the tax authorities with adjustments for inflation, surcharges and fines. If the matter is a tax refund, the denial of such refund will be confirmed.

Criminal penalties will only be imposed on taxpayers that commit any of the crimes typified in the Federal Tax Code, such as tax fraud or contraband.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

Taxpayers may recover overpaid taxes as long as they prove that such taxes should have never been paid to the tax authorities.

To recover such amounts, taxpayers must file before the tax authorities a tax refund application in which they must specify why the specific amounts correspond to overpaid tax.

In cases where the tax authorities deny such tax refund, taxpayers may challenge such decision through the procedures explained above.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Administrative decisions or assessments may always be challenged by means of any of the procedures set forth herein.

It is important to note that under Mexican law, taxpayers are allowed to assert formal and substantive arguments. However, under a recent criterion issued by the Supreme Court of Justice, formal arguments can only declare the nullity of a ruling to provide that such formal violation is amended.

iii Claimants

The parties entitled to file tax claims are those who are obliged to pay the applicable tax, or those who have already paid the tax and file a tax refund application.

Regarding VAT, for purposes of filing a tax claim, the parties must demonstrate whether they lodged the VAT refund or passed on the VAT to another party in accordance with the VAT mechanism set forth in Mexican law, and that they are entitled to claim the refund thereof.

VI COSTS

It is not common for taxpayers to recover the costs incurred to challenge a tax assessment or a tax refund; however, under the Tax Administration Services Law, the tax authorities are responsible for paying damages caused by their officers derived from the performance of their duties.

In fact, under the Tax Administration Services Law, the tax authorities must indemnify taxpayers when their ruling is declared null and void as a result of not being duly grounded in law and fact or the competence of the tax authorities; is contrary to a criterion issued by the Supreme Court of Justice in terms of legality; or is declared null for abuse of power.

However, in practice, obtaining a decision where the courts order the tax authorities to pay such costs is unlikely.

The tax authorities are never entitled to charge their costs regarding tax claims. Under the Federal Tax Code, they are entitled to recover the costs incurred in other kinds of procedures, such as the seizure process, but we do not analyse this in this chapter.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

i Taxpayers' Ombudsman

The Mexican Taxpayers' Ombudsman, better known as Prodecon, is an independent public organisation established through a Decree of Law published on 4 September 2006.

On 1 September 2011, Prodecon opened as a decentralised public agency on tax matters that follows up those grievance or complaint procedures against acts of the federal tax authorities that violate the rights of taxpayers.

Among other faculties, Prodecon plays a major role in conclusive agreements (mediation procedure), which are the first alternative means of tax dispute resolution in the Mexican tax system.

To initiate a conclusive agreement, a taxpayer needs to have a ruling issued by the tax authorities with a classification of acts or omissions within an audit procedure. However, under the Federal Tax Code, one of the requirements that should be met to initiate the conclusive agreement is that a tax deficiency has not been assessed. The conclusive agreement allows a negotiation between taxpayers and the tax authorities in which Prodecon acts as a mediator, and it may grant mutual benefits for the parties.

The issuance of a conclusive agreement is binding on the parties and cannot be challenged. However, if taxpayers do not agree with the tax authorities' proposal, they may decline it.

In recent years, Prodecon has played an important role in tax disputes, and has clearly provided a new option for taxpayers to avoid litigation against tax assessments and tax refunds.

ii Mutual agreement procedures

The mutual agreement procedure is another alternative dispute resolution applicable in Mexico, which is established in the treaties for the avoidance of double taxation entered into by the Mexican government with other governments.

Such mutual agreement procedure can be initiated simultaneously with the previously described administrative appeal, and it suspends the resolution of the administrative appeal or the annulment complaint.

To initiate such procedure, taxpayers must first file a writ before the Mexican tax authorities. Once the writ is filed, if the writ is duly grounded, the competent tax authority must try to find a solution unilaterally.

If the competent authority considers said writ grounded but is not in a position to adopt a favourable decision, it must try to solve the matter through a mutual agreement with the competent authority of the other country.

By means of the mutual agreement procedure, the Mexican tax authorities will establish the terms and conditions of the agreement.

If the other country's government agrees to a correlative adjustment, the most common outcome will result in the elimination of the double taxation through the 'corresponding adjustment'.

Once the agreement between the authorities is concluded, the taxpayer will be notified of the decision with the corresponding explanation. After the taxpayer accepts the decision, the tax authorities will exchange written confirmation of the agreement, which will also be notified to the taxpayer.

Subsequently, both tax authorities will execute the result, effectively repairing the non-conforming assessment.

If the decision is favourable to the taxpayer, it will express its conformity and commit to abandon any claim or appeal that it may have filed in Mexico, or it will refrain from filing any other claims or appeals.

Once the taxpayer has expressed its conformity, the competent authorities shall proceed to enforce said decision within their jurisdictions, or carry out the necessary proceedings for it.

With respect to the mutual agreement procedure, there is a Manual for the Application of the Administrative Process of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development that establishes that usually the authorities grant a two-year period to issue a decision, and if the competent authorities do not come to an agreement they may continue their discussions, or consider the possibility of granting a reasonable extension to reach such agreement.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Under the Federal Tax Code, tax provisions that set forth burdens as well as exceptions thereto for private parties, in addition to those that define violations and set forth penalties, are of strict application. Provisions that define taxpayers, activities subject to tax, the amount to which the tax rate applies, rates or the tax rate schedule thereof, are considered to impose burdens on private parties.

Other tax provisions will be interpreted by applying any method for legal interpretation. In the absence of an express tax provision, the provisions of federal law will be applied, provided that the application thereof is not contrary to the essence of tax legislation.

In terms of the aforementioned, there are no general anti-avoidance rules for tax purposes; however, the Mexican legislation establishes special anti-avoidance rules, such as the case of the Mexican Income Tax Law, which establishes an exemption for transactions entered into between related parties.

In fact, the Income Tax Law establishes that, for the purposes of calculating Mexican-source income, the tax authorities may, in exercising the powers of verification afforded by law, determine that a transaction is a sham exclusively for tax purposes. Such determination shall be duly based on law and facts within the review procedure, and the existence of the sham shall be stated in the ruling assessing the taxpayer's fiscal situation, provided that the transactions had been conducted between related parties as set out in the Law.

For fiscal year 2013, a modification was proposed for the Federal Tax Code to establish that if the tax authorities detect practices or operations from taxpayers that formally do not imply a taxable activity and lack business rationality, they could assess the corresponding tax. However, such amendment was not approved and never came into effect.

The Income Tax Law also establishes as a non-deductible item the interest on a taxpayer's debts that exceeds the equivalent of three times its shareholders' equity, and that comes from debts entered into with foreign-resident related parties.

In addition, the Income Tax Law establishes as non-deductible items payments of interests, royalties or technical assistance made to a foreign entity that controls or is controlled by the taxpayer when the foreign entity that receives payment is considered transparent; the payment is considered non-existent for tax purposes of the country or territory where the foreign entity is found; and the foreign entity does not consider such payment as income subject to tax under the applicable tax provisions.

The Income Tax Law also establishes the possibility for the following to be treated as dividends for the purposes of such Law: interest derived from credits extended to legal entities or to permanent establishments in Mexico of foreign residents by Mexican residents or foreign residents that are related to the party paying the credit. Such is the case for interest derived from back-to-back loans, even if extended through a financial institution residing in Mexico or abroad.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

Mexico has entered into treaties for the avoidance of double taxation with many countries. However, there are no specific domestic rules applicable to the interpretation and application thereof.

Derived from the above, to interpret and apply such treaties Mexico should observe the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, the Model Convention of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and its commentaries, as well the respective protocols.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

i Relevant operations report

For fiscal year 2014, a modification was added to the Federal Tax Code that obliges taxpayers to provide to the tax authorities a report of the relevant transactions they have carried out.

In terms of such modification, for the tax authorities to exercise their functions effectively and efficiently it is essential that they have the relevant information in a timely manner, and, due to the proposal to eliminate the obligation to submit audited tax reports, it is necessary for the authorities to replace that information through requests made to taxpayers.

Due to the above, a section was added to the Federal Tax Code providing that taxpayers must submit to the tax authorities information related to the relevant operations indicated in the official form approved by such authorities within a 30-day term counted from the date the operations were entered into. It also provides that, whenever taxpayers submit information in an incomplete or erroneous manner, they will have a 30-day term counted from the notice of the tax authorities to correct the information wrongly submitted, and if that information is not corrected, the obligation shall be considered as unfulfilled.

The tax authorities have established a catalogue of 36 operations contained in different fields that are considered relevant, including:

- a* financial operations;
- b* transfer pricing operations;
- c* reorganisation and restructuring operations, and
- d* other relevant operations.

We consider that taxpayers should take into account the obligation of reporting such relevant operations to the tax authorities and be aware of such obligation's importance.

ii Amendment regarding human rights

In 2011, an amendment was made to the Federal Constitution that basically obliges all Mexican authorities, including the judicial branch, to always respect the human rights of private parties, including taxpayers. Derived from such amendment, all judicial authorities, including the Federal Administrative Court, the collegiate tribunals and the Mexican Supreme Court of Justice, should issue their decisions taking into consideration taxpayers' human rights, especially those provided by international treaties or agreements entered into by Mexico.

Although the amendment was a big step to respect human rights at all levels, the Supreme Court of Justice has already issued a criterion in which it establishes that, if an article of the Constitution goes against a human right provided for in a treaty entered into by Mexico, such provision must prevail, which, from our standpoint, is a regression in the evolution of human rights.

iii VAT refunds

As previously mentioned in Section 1, supra, in recent years the tax authorities have denied tax refunds in a very visible manner, mainly refunds related to VAT. In fact, the tax authorities sometimes fail to respond to such refunds, or when they do so, they merely limit their response to a request for additional documents to proceed to such refunds.

In addition, in recent years the tax authorities have requested from taxpayers documents that are not related to or irrelevant for the respective tax refund in order to deny such refund.

iv Substantial claim

On 27 January 2017, an amendment was realised, and a new claim to challenge tax assessments (not tax refund denials) was incorporated into the Mexican legislation.

In such process, the parties will only be able to make arguments in connection with the substance of the tax assessment, and no formal or procedural arguments will be allowed. Its filing will be optional for the parties.

One of the benefits of this 'substantial claim' will be that the taxpayers will not be obliged to offer a guarantee for the purposes of securing the challenged tax assessment, and its study and resolution will be commissioned to specialised judges with extensive knowledge in tax matters, who should privilege oral principles (implementation of hearings, verbal communication between the judge and the parties) and celerity (reduction of deadlines by eliminating formalities).

The parties will only be allowed to file the 'substantial claim' when the amount of the tax assessment exceeds approximately 5 million Mexican pesos.

We consider that this new claim could be something new and beneficial for our justice system. However, as happens with new regulations, once the implementation of the referred-to claim starts, it will be necessary to realise any necessary adjustment for its implementation in line with the current situation in Mexico.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Even though Prodecon has played an important role in the past in allowing taxpayers to negotiate with the tax authorities and to solve disputes between such parties, we consider that much work remains to be done to challenge the tax authorities' position in many matters. With respect to this, we believe that Prodecon continue to play an important role. We also consider that it would be advisable to afford Prodecon greater power so that its recommendations become mandatory for tax authorities.

In recent years, we have also seen that the Supreme Court of Justice has issued decisions regarding tax matters in a manner that does not benefit taxpayers. In view of this, given that the Supreme Court of Justice is the highest court in Mexico, we strongly believe that the designation of new judges must be made by preferring officers with a judicial carrier over officers with a background related to the tax authorities or tax administration. This is to avoid such judges issuing decisions with interests other than the administration of justice.

With respect to the above, in our opinion a requirement that should be met to become a judge of the Supreme Court of Justice is that candidates have never worked (or at least not for a long period of time) in the public administration, particularly in the Tax Administration Service.

NETHERLANDS

I INTRODUCTION

In the Netherlands, litigation is one way of resolving a tax dispute. Luckily, the majority of tax disputes can be resolved without having to go to court. In practice, tax disputes can often be resolved (or even prevented) by having an open dialogue with the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration. It is possible to request certainty in advance by means of an advance tax ruling or advanced pricing agreement. If a dispute has already arisen, taxpayers can reach a settlement agreement with the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration.

There are of course disputes that leave no other option but to litigate; in cases where penalties are involved especially, litigation may be the only option. Taxpayers should be aware that litigation in tax disputes can be costly and time consuming. Alternative ways of resolving tax disputes are available, such as mediation and – in the case of double taxation in an international context – competent authority procedures or arbitration.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

In the Netherlands, a distinction is made between civil law, criminal law and administrative law. Administrative law prescribes the rules that public authorities must adhere to in their decision-making, and regulates relations between government and citizens. The procedural aspects related to taxation, such as the procedures regarding filings and the determination of (additional) tax assessment notices, and the procedural rules regarding administrative appeal and court proceedings, are laid down in the General Administrative Law Act and the General Tax Act.

Before an appeal can be made to the courts, an administrative appeal procedure before the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration must be completed. This procedure enables the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration to reconsider a decision of the tax inspector (administrative review). It also functions as a filter and reduces the caseload at the tax courts.

A taxpayer has the right to object against those decisions the law deems open to appeal (closed system of legal remedies). Examples of decisions that can be challenged are tax assessment notices, notifications on the formal determination of tax losses and information notifications (i.e., a decision by the tax inspector in which it is formally determined that a taxpayer has not met certain information or administration obligations).

A distinction should be made between taxes that are levied by means of a separate tax assessment (such as corporate income tax and personal income tax) and taxes that are levied based on what can be characterised as self-assessment (remittance-based taxes, such as value added tax, dividend withholding tax and wage withholding tax). With respect to taxes that are levied by means of a separate tax assessment notice, the tax inspector can issue a tax assessment to a taxpayer within three years after the taxable year has ended. If a (final) tax assessment has already been imposed, the tax inspector can make an adjustment by means of an additional tax assessment if there is a qualifying 'new fact' or if the taxpayer has acted in bad faith. The time period for imposing an additional tax assessment is limited to five years after the relevant taxable year has ended. Regarding income from a foreign source, an extended period of 12 years may apply. Errors in a prior assessment of tax that are, or should have been, reasonably apparent to the taxpayer can be adjusted by the tax inspector within two years after the incorrect tax assessment. With respect to remittance-based taxes, no separate tax assessment notice is issued. Taxes are paid directly by the taxpayer without a formalisation of the amount of tax due in the form of a separate tax assessment. An adjustment for an underpayment of tax can be made by the tax inspector in the form of an additional tax assessment within a five-year period after the tax year in which the tax liability has arisen. A 12-year period is applicable in the event of an acquisition of beneficial ownership of real estate.

A taxpayer can challenge a tax assessment (or additional tax assessment) or, in the case of remittance-based taxes, the tax payment in an administrative appeal procedure. If the decision of the tax inspector in the administrative appeal procedure is wholly or partially unfavourable, an appeal can be lodged with the district court against this decision. If the decision of the district court is wholly or partially unfavourable for the taxpayer (or for the tax inspector), an appeal can be lodged with the courts of appeal and, ultimately, with the Supreme Court.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Administrative appeal procedure

The administrative appeal procedure is initiated by lodging an objection with the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration within six weeks from the date of the litigious decision (e.g., a tax assessment). If the objection is lodged after the six-week term has lapsed, the objection is inadmissible. A taxpayer is entitled to a hearing. There are no filing costs or registration fees for lodging an objection.

The tax inspector is required to decide on the decision within six weeks from the moment that the objection period expired. In other words, the tax inspector has to decide within 12 weeks from the date of the decision that is being challenged. The tax inspector is allowed to extend this period with an additional six weeks. Further extension can be agreed upon by both parties. If the tax inspector does not reach a decision within the aforementioned period, formal steps can be taken to force a decision in the appeal procedure. The decision on the objection must be taken by a tax inspector other than the one who has made the initial decision or who imposed the tax assessment.

ii Appeal and higher appeal proceedings before the tax courts

If a tax inspector decides unfavourably on the objection of a taxpayer (i.e., the objection is wholly or partially denied), the taxpayer can have the formal decision of the tax inspector reviewed by the courts.

A taxpayer can lodge an appeal against the decision in an appeal procedure with the district court. A notice of appeal has to be submitted within six weeks from the date of the decision of the tax inspector in the administrative appeal procedure. The taxpayer has to pay a court registry fee. The notice of appeal has to be prepared in the Dutch language and must be fully substantiated. A notice of appeal that does not meet all legal requirements or that is lodged after six weeks may be considered inadmissible. After the notice of appeal, the tax inspector will submit a statement of defence. Depending on the case, a second written round may be applicable. Parties are invited at least three weeks in advance to appear at a session of the court (i.e., court hearing). Parties can submit additional documents until 10 days before the court hearing. If the parties have consented to this, the court can determine that there will not be a court hearing. During the procedure before the district court, it is not required that the taxpayer is represented by an advocate or tax adviser. The taxpayer him- or herself can appear before the district court. The district court will rule on the facts and the legal questions within six weeks from the date of the court hearing. This term can be extended. If the district court is not able to render a decision within six weeks, the parties will be informed.

Both the taxpayer and the tax inspector can lodge an appeal or higher appeal with the court of appeal against the decision of the district court. The term for lodging an appeal with the court of appeal is six weeks from the date of the decision of the district court. Rules similar to those for the appeal procedure with the district court apply. The court of appeal also rules on the facts and legal questions.

In tax law cases, examination in court is held behind closed doors. The decision of the court will, however, be published, but in an anonymous form (i.e., without the name of the taxpayer or references to specifics that may reveal the identity of the taxpayer).

iii Rules of evidence

In tax proceedings before the district court and the court of appeal, the court is not bound by specific rules of evidence. The court generally plays an active role and will explore the relevant facts. There is no minimum of evidence that must be produced before a fact can be declared proven, and the courts are free to weigh all evidence. The rules on the apportionment of the burden of proof have been developed in case law. As a general rule, in the case of a profit adjustment, the tax inspector has to prove the factual elements on which the tax assessment has been based. In the case of a deduction or exemption, as a general rule, the taxpayer has to prove the factual elements that reduce the taxable amount. The courts have to apportion the burden of proof in accordance with the requirements of reasonableness. In practice, this may imply that if a party is the only one that has the relevant information, such party may be obliged to put forward all relevant information as a starting point for producing the required evidence even if this party in the first instance does not have the burden of proof.

In specific cases, the General Tax Act provides for a reversal of the burden of proof. If, for example, a taxpayer fails to meet his or her obligations to provide information, or fails to meet certain documentation or administration obligations under Dutch tax law, a tax inspector can issue an information notification. The information notification is a formal decision in which it is determined that a certain taxpayer has not met its obligations. An information notification can be challenged. If the information notification becomes final (i.e., the taxpayer does not contest the information notification or a judge ultimately decides that the information notification was correct), the taxpayer may be confronted with a reversal of the burden of proof. In that case, the taxpayer has to demonstrate that the assumptions of the tax inspector and the corrections made by the tax inspector are incorrect. Not filing a required tax return may also result in a reversal of the burden of proof. The rules on the burden of proof do not apply in the case of a penalty decision. If a penalty is challenged, the tax authorities have the burden of proof concerning the applicability of the penalty and the amount of the penalty.

iv Cassation by the Supreme Court

The taxpayer and the State Secretary for Finance (not the tax inspector) can lodge an appeal in cassation with the Supreme Court. The aim of cassation is to preserve legal uniformity, to steer the development of law and to safeguard legal protection. Cassation is a check on the quality of contested judgments given by the lower courts as regards both the application of the law and the legal reasoning behind it. Cassation differs from ordinary appeals. In an ordinary appeal, every aspect of the case is reconsidered, and a new examination of the facts may take place if necessary. The Supreme Court is restricted in this respect: it is required by law to base its deliberations on the facts as established by the lower courts. If a judicial decision is quashed, the Supreme Court will usually refer the case back to a lower court to deal with the case further. The Supreme Court only passes final judgment if no significant questions of fact remain to be decided.

Proceedings before the Supreme Court take place almost entirely in written form. In tax cases, the taxpayer may lodge appeals in cassation and submit grounds for cassation, but a taxpayer cannot appear before the Supreme Court, and must be represented by an advocate to explain the various aspects of the case in detail (oral or written counsel's plea).

v Deferment of payment

During the administrative appeal procedure or judicial proceedings, payment of the contested tax assessment is not deferred automatically. If a taxpayer wishes to be allowed to defer payment, the taxpayer has to request from the tax collector (the department within the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration that deals with the collection of taxes) a deferment of payment. Deferment of payment will only be granted until a decision is reached in that particular procedure. In other words, for each phase during litigation (i.e., appeal, higher appeal, cassation), a taxpayer has to request the tax collector to be allowed to defer payment. The tax collector may request security for the amount of unpaid tax (e.g., by means of a bank guarantee or a pledge on assets). If the litigious tax assessment also includes an undisputed amount, this amount has to be paid according to the original stipulated term in the tax assessment. Interest is calculated on the unpaid amount of tax. If the disputed amount of tax was paid and the taxpayer wins the case, the amount of tax is returned to the taxpayer, but interest is not compensated.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

i Administrative penalties

A default penalty can be imposed in the following cases:

Failing to (timely) file a tax return for taxes that are levied by assessment (such as corporate income tax, personal income tax)	€5,278 (maximum)
Failure to (timely) file a tax return regarding remittance-based taxes (such as VAT and dividend withholding tax)	€131 (maximum)
Failure to (timely) file a tax return regarding payroll taxes	€1,319 (maximum)
Failure to (timely) pay remittance-based taxes	€5,278 (maximum)

An offence penalty can be imposed if:

Information or documentation, or both, are intentionally not provided, or are incorrectly provided, by a taxpayer in connection with a request for a preliminary tax assessment or a request for the revision of a preliminary tax assessment	100% of the amount of tax not paid (maximum)
A tax return is intentionally not, incorrectly or incompletely filed by a taxpayer	100% of the amount of the tax assessment (maximum), or 300% of the tax due in specific cases involving tax evasion by individuals (maximum)
The tax assessment is set too low, which is attributable to wilful misconduct or gross negligence on the part of the taxpayer	100% of the amount of the additional tax assessment (maximum)
A remittance-based tax is (partially) not paid, or not paid in time, due to wilful misconduct or gross negligence of the taxpayer	100% of the amount not paid or the amount not paid in time (maximum)

ii Criminal sanctions

A distinction is made between misdemeanours for which, in general, a fine applies as a sanction, and criminal acts, for which a jail sentence or a fine can be imposed. If the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration believes a taxpayer has committed a criminal offence, the authorities will initiate, or cause to be initiated, (separate) criminal proceedings against the taxpayer. Criminal prosecution is handled by the public prosecutor's office, and cases are dealt with by the criminal courts rather than the tax courts.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

If a taxpayer has overpaid taxes, he or she can lodge an objection to the tax assessment imposed by the tax inspector within six weeks after the date of the assessment. For remittance-based taxes, a taxpayer can lodge an objection against the tax payment within six weeks. If the term to lodge an objection has passed, the taxpayer can request the tax inspector for an ex officio reduction or an ex officio refund. Based on the policy of the Ministry of Finance, a tax inspector is in general authorised to grant an ex officio reduction or refund over the past five years. It is not possible to lodge an objection against a decision of the tax inspector on a request for an ex officio reduction or refund.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Administrative decisions can be challenged if they are not compatible with specific provisions of tax law or treaties. Administrative decisions may also be challenged if they were not made in line with the principles of a sound administration. These principles include, inter alia, the principle of legitimate expectations, the right to equal treatment and the principle of fair play. These principles are not just important in administrative procedures; they also determine the standards of the decision-making process by a tax inspector. A taxpayer can invoke principle of sound administration if, for example, the tax inspector issues a tax assessment that is not in line with commitments previously made or with a viewpoint explicitly determined towards a taxpayer (or a group of taxpayers), or if a decision of the tax inspector is not in line with the official policy of the State Secretary for Finance.

iii Claimants

The taxpayer to whom a tax assessment is directed, the taxpayer that pays a remittance-based tax or the person who receives a decision that is open for administrative appeal can challenge such tax assessment, payment or decision. Only in exceptional cases can a person other than the person to whom the notice or assessment was addressed challenge the relevant notice or assessment.

VI COSTS

A taxpayer is entitled to a reimbursement of the legal expenses incurred in relation to the administrative appeal procedure if the tax inspector decides favourably on the objection lodged. The expenses incurred for legal assistance can be reclaimed, but only if the taxpayer has requested this before the tax inspector has decided on the objection. The amount of compensation is limited by law; it concerns a fixed amount and is not more than a fraction of the actual costs involved.

If a court rules (wholly or partially) in favour of the taxpayer, the court registry fee will be refunded. Upon application, the court may also rule that the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration has to reimburse the taxpayer for the (legal) expenses relating to the procedure. A reimbursement for costs has to be explicitly requested by the taxpayer in the court proceedings. As with the legal expenses incurred in an administrative appeal procedure, the amount of compensation is limited by law and concerns a fixed amount. The courts can deviate from the fixed amounts, but will only do so in very specific cases.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

i Advance tax rulings and advance pricing agreements

It is possible to obtain certainty in advance by obtaining an advance tax ruling or an advance pricing agreement. There is no time limit on requesting an advance tax ruling or an advance pricing agreement. A decision of the tax inspector to reject a request for an advance tax ruling or an advance pricing agreement cannot be litigated against.

ii Mutual agreement procedures and arbitration

Under certain bilateral tax treaties, a taxpayer who faces, or is likely to face, double taxation may apply for its elimination by way of a competent authority procedure under a bilateral tax treaty if no provision for the prevention of double taxation is applicable. Within the European Union, the Arbitration Convention can provide for an arbitration procedure if all involved EU Member States are signatories to the Convention.

iii Mediation and settlement

Dutch law provides for other alternative methods of resolving tax disputes such as settlement and mediation. The process of mediation in tax disputes has been used by the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration since 2005.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Dutch tax law does not provide for a general definition of tax evasion or tax avoidance. Instead, the Dutch legislator has introduced specific anti-abuse rules. Anti-abuse rules are also included in bilateral treaties. A tax inspector may use the abuse of law concept of fraus legis. Under this concept, the tax authorities (and the courts) may eliminate or substitute a legal action, resulting in the tax burden to be determined based on the legal circumstances as altered by the application of fraus legis. To apply the concept of fraus legis, the absolute decisive reason to go into the legal arrangement should have been to save tax. The way the arrangement has been put together must lead to a result that is contrary to the objective and purpose of the law, and the arrangement as such should have no other practical meaning than to save taxes.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

The Netherlands has one of the most extensive tax treaty networks in the EU. The treaties generally provide for substantial reductions of withholding tax on dividends, interest and royalties. Most tax treaties negotiated by the Netherlands relating to income and capital are based on the draft models published by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in 1963, 1977 and 1992 to 2000. The Netherlands is a signatory to the EU Arbitration Convention of 23 July 1990.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Transfer pricing is increasingly becoming an area of focus for the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration. The Dutch Tax and Customs Administration not only benefits from increasing international cooperation with respect to the exchange of information, but also takes advantage of other recent developments such as the action items following BEPS, country-by-country reporting, and EU and domestic-tax transparency measures.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

No changes to the law are anticipated that might have an impact on the practice and system of handling tax disputes and tax litigation in the Netherlands. Overall, the level of legal protection in tax matters in the Netherlands can be considered to be fairly good.

PHILIPPINES

I INTRODUCTION

Tax litigation in the Philippines, in terms of substantive law, remains a complex law practice and requires specialised knowledge and experience. The Philippine tax system is a combination of global and schedular systems of taxation. Taxation law not only encompasses national taxes, imposed mainly under the National Internal Revenue Code (Tax Code), but also local taxes authorised under the Local Government Code (LGC) and scattered across a variety of local legislation by way of implementing local tax ordinances. Income taxation has its own intricacies. While ordinary income of corporations is taxed at a flat rate, that of individuals is taxed at a progressive rate. Certain types of income are excluded from ordinary income and are taxed separately. The law also allows various tax exemptions and deductions. One has to understand the various revenue regulations, revenue memorandum circulars and opinions regularly issued by the Philippine tax authorities to be able to view the tax system landscape clearly.

However, in terms of procedural law, tax litigation in the Philippines, whether involving national or local taxes, consists invariably of two phases: an administrative phase and a judicial phase. The challenge in procedural law is striking a balance between streamlining the assessment and increasing the tax collection while preserving the right of the taxpayers to procedural due process. This chapter focuses on the law and the recent regulations of the sometimes overzealous tax authorities to expedite assessment and collection, and their interactions with procedural due process.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

The Philippine tax system is mainly based on a self-assessment approach wherein the taxpayer is responsible for determining his or her tax liability, filing his or her tax return, paying the tax due and complying with reporting requirements. Internal revenue taxes are administered by the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR), while local taxes are administered by the local treasurer. The self-assessment approach is balanced and regulated by the authority of the BIR and the local treasurer to examine the taxpayer's returns and documents, and to assess the correct taxes due.<sup>2</sup> Tax litigation starts when the BIR or the local treasurer issues a formal assessment notice and the taxpayer disputes the same. This section provides an overview of the administrative phase of tax litigation. The judicial phase of tax litigation is discussed in detail in Section III, infra.

i National taxes

After the taxpayer has filed a return, the Commissioner of the BIR (Commissioner) or his or her duly authorised representatives may authorise the examination of any taxpayer and the assessment of the correct amount of tax.<sup>3</sup> The BIR can assess internal revenue taxes within three years from the date of actual filing or the last day prescribed by law for the filing of the return – whichever is later.<sup>4</sup> However, in cases of false or fraudulent returns with intent to evade taxes, or failure to file a return, the prescriptive period is extended to 10 years after the discovery of the falsity, fraud or omission.<sup>5</sup> It should be clarified that the mere falsity of a return does not merit the application of the 10-year prescriptive period unless it can be shown that the return was made with a design to mislead or deceive on the part of the taxpayer, or at the very least show culpable negligence.<sup>6</sup>

If, prior to the expiration of the three-year period prescribed in Section 203 for the assessment of the tax, both the Commissioner and the taxpayer have agreed in writing to its assessment after such time, the tax may be assessed within the period agreed upon. To be valid, a waiver of the statute of limitations must strictly comply with the requirements prescribed by the regulations. However, in the recent Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Next Mobile, Inc case,<sup>7</sup> the Supreme Court carved out an exception to this general rule. In this case, the BIR failed in five instances to verify the authority of the finance director of the taxpayer to execute the waivers. However, the Court noted that although both parties knew the infirmities of the waivers, they continued to deal with each other. Hence, the Court applied the in pari delicto principle, and ruled that the taxpayer cannot impugn the validity of the waivers and is deemed estopped from questioning the validity of the waivers.

Following the Next Mobile decision, the Commissioner issued Revenue Memorandum Order (RMO) No. 14-2016 (RMO 14-2016), which revised the guidelines for the execution of waivers from the defence of prescription by providing less stringent requirements for valid waivers. RMO 14-2016 was intended to address the ‘rampant practice by the taxpayers to contest the validity of their own waivers of the statute of limitations after having availed [themselves] of the benefits thereof’.

The audit process commences with the issuance of a letter of authority (LOA) to a taxpayer who has been selected for audit. The LOA is an official document that empowers a revenue officer to examine and scrutinise a taxpayer’s books of accounts and other accounting records to determine the taxpayer’s correct internal revenue tax liabilities.

If, after review and evaluation by the Commissioner or his or her duly authorised representative, as the case may be, it is determined that there exists sufficient basis to assess the taxpayer for any tax deficiency tax or taxes, the BIR will issue a preliminary assessment notice (PAN) to inform the taxpayer of the discrepancy. Prior to their amendment in 2013, the regulations provided that the BIR would issue a PAN, and that a notice of informal conference should first be issued to the taxpayer inviting him or her to conference with the examiners to present his or her side and explanations regarding the BIR’s findings.<sup>8</sup> Under the current regulations, the BIR no longer issues notices of informal conference.<sup>9</sup> Consequently, the BIR will simply issue the PAN stating the proposed deficiency assessment, as well as the detailed facts and the law, and the relevant rules and regulations. While the Tax Code does not require informal conferences between the BIR examiners and a taxpayer prior to the issuance of a PAN, the practice of conferring with the examiners was provided in the regulations since 1999,<sup>10</sup> up until their amendment, and was recognised by jurisprudence as a guarantee of procedural due process. It was also a useful tool to enable the examiners and a taxpayer to agree on certain findings before the PAN was issued.

In some cases, however, the law provides that the issuance of the PAN may be dispensed with, and the formal letter of demand and final assessment notice (FLD/FAN) can be issued outright:

- a* when the finding for any deficiency is the result of mathematical error in the computation of the tax appearing in the tax return filed by the taxpayer;
- b* when a discrepancy has been determined between the tax withheld and the amount actually remitted by the withholding agent;
- c* when a taxpayer who opted to claim a refund or tax credit of excess creditable withholding tax for a taxable period was determined to have carried over and automatically applied the same amount claimed against the estimated tax liabilities for the taxable quarter or quarters of the succeeding taxable year;
- d* when the excise tax due on excisable articles has not been paid; or
- e* when an article locally purchased or imported by an exempt person has been sold, traded or transferred to non-exempt persons.<sup>11</sup>

If the taxpayer fails to respond to the PAN within 15 days from date of receipt of the same, he or she is considered in default, and an FLD/FAN will be issued calling for payment of the taxpayer’s deficiency tax liability, inclusive of applicable penalties.<sup>12</sup>

10 See Revenue Regulation 12-99.

12 Revenue Regulation No. 18-2013, Section 3.1.1.

The BIR will issue the FLD/FAN if it is not satisfied with the reply of the taxpayer to the PAN. It is noteworthy that under prevailing regulations the BIR is mandated to issue a FLD/FAN 15 days from receipt of the reply to the PAN.<sup>13</sup> While this BIR innovation may have expedited the disposition of assessments, it creates a strain on the procedural due process of taxpayers. Fifteen days is too short a time for the BIR to resolve complicated tax issues, especially now that informal conferences that could have threshed out issues have been dispensed with. The practical consequence of this regulation is that an FLD/FAN will be issued as a matter of course within 15 days from receipt of the reply without the BIR having thoroughly considered the arguments that may have been raised by the taxpayer in his or her reply to the PAN.

The FLD/FAN calling for payment of the taxpayer's deficiency tax or taxes must state the facts, the law, rules and regulations, or jurisprudence on which the assessment is based; otherwise, the assessment shall be void.<sup>14</sup> The taxpayer has 30 days from receipt of the assessment to protest the same. The two kinds of protest will be discussed in detail in Section V, infra. If the protest is denied in whole or in part, or is not acted upon within 180 days from the submission of documents, the taxpayer adversely affected by the decision or inaction may appeal to the Court of Tax Appeals (CTA) within 30 days from receipt of the said decision or from the lapse of the 180-day period. Otherwise, the decision shall become final and executory.<sup>15</sup> The reckoning point for the taxpayer to file an appeal with the CTA has been clarified in recent jurisprudence. Where the Commissioner of the BIR failed to act on the disputed assessment within the 180-day period from date of submission of documents, a taxpayer can either file a petition for review with the CTA within 30 days after the expiration of the 180-day period; or await the final decision of the Commissioner on the disputed assessments and appeal such final decision to the CTA within 30 days after receipt of a copy of such decision.

In other words, the assessment would not become final and executorial for the sole reason that petitioner failed to appeal the inaction of the Commissioner within 30 days after the 180-day regulatory period.<sup>16</sup> The above remedies, however, are exclusive, such that resort to the first remedy bars the other.

ii Local taxes

The process for disputing local taxes is governed by separate legislation – the LGC. The dispute process does not deviate significantly from the model outlined above. It begins when the local treasurer issues a notice of assessment stating the nature of the local tax, fees, surcharges and penalties. The local treasurer has a longer period to assess local taxes than the BIR has with respect to national taxes. Local taxes may be assessed within five years from the date they became due. In the case of fraud or intent to evade the payment of taxes, the local treasurer has 10 years from discovery of the fraud to assess deficiency taxes.<sup>17</sup> The taxpayer has 60 days from receipt of the notice of assessment to file a written protest with the local treasurer. The local treasurer shall decide the protest within 60 days from the time of its filing.

16 Lascona Land Co v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, GR No. 171251, 5 March 2012.

The taxpayer, on the other hand, shall have 30 days from receipt of the denial or protest or from the lapse of the 60-day period prescribed within which to appeal to the regional trial court (RTC). The decision of the RTC may be appealed to the CTA, and the dispute process discussed below will be followed.

Disputing assessments for real property taxes are governed by a different set of rules in the LGC. In the case of real property taxes, the protest mechanism goes through specialised quasi-judicial bodies like the local board of assessment appeals (BAA), which has the power to summon witnesses, conduct visual inspections and issue subpoenas.<sup>18</sup> It must be noted that, unlike in the case of internal revenue taxes and other local taxes, no protest involving real property tax will be entertained unless the taxpayer first pays the tax 'under protest'.<sup>19</sup> The protest is filed within 30 days from payment of the tax to the Treasurer, who must decide the protest within 60 days from receipt.<sup>20</sup> If the protest is denied, or upon lapse of the 60-day period, the taxpayer may appeal to the BAA.<sup>21</sup> A taxpayer who is unsatisfied with the action of a local assessor may, within 60 days from the date of receipt of the written notice of assessment, appeal to the BAA of the relevant province or city.<sup>22</sup>

If the decision of the BAA is unfavourable, the taxpayer may appeal the decision to the Central Board of Assessment Appeals (CBAA) within 30 days of receipt of the decision.<sup>23</sup>

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

The CTA is a highly specialised court that reviews cases in taxation. It has exclusive jurisdiction to review by appeal decisions and inactions of the Commissioner of the BIR in cases involving disputed assessments and refunds of internal taxes.<sup>24</sup> The CTA also reviews decisions of the RTCs on local taxes resolved by them in the exercise of their original and appellate jurisdiction and decisions of the CBAA.<sup>25</sup>

The judicial phase of tax litigation consists of several levels of review. This phase of tax litigation is crucial because, in actual practice, it seems unlikely that the BIR will reverse or cancel the assessment. Thus, there is the necessity for an objective and impartial review by the courts. At the CTA, there are two built-in tiers of review: the CTA divisions and the CTA en banc. The appealed decision of the Commissioner shall be decided by a division of the CTA (CTA division).<sup>26</sup> A taxpayer adversely affected by the decision of the CTA division may seek reconsideration or a new trial before the same division. The resolution of the CTA division on a motion for reconsideration or new trial may be appealed via a petition for review to the CTA en banc.<sup>27</sup> Ultimately, the decision of the CTA en banc may be appealed to the Philippine Supreme Court through a petition for review on certiorari.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

As in the case of other jurisdictions, in the Philippines, compliance with the tax legislation is regulated through administrative, civil and criminal penalties.

Under the Tax Code, failure to file an information return, statement or list, or to keep any record, or to supply any information required by law on the date prescribed, shall be fined 1,000 Philippine pesos for each such failure.<sup>28</sup>

Moreover, non-compliance with the rules on the filing of returns and payment of taxes may subject the taxpayer to civil penalties. Civil penalties refer to surcharges, deficiency and delinquency interests. A surcharge is a penalty or exaction imposed by law in addition to the main taxes required to be paid by law. A surcharge of 25 per cent of the amount due will be imposed in the following cases:

- a* failure to file a return and pay the tax due thereon;
- b* filing of a return with an internal revenue other than those with whom the return is filed;
- c* failure to pay the deficiency tax within the time prescribed for its payment in the notice of assessment; or
- d* failure to pay the full or part of the amount of tax before the date prescribed for its payment.

Furthermore, in the case of wilful neglect to file a return or in the case of a false or fraudulent return wilfully made, the surcharge to be imposed is 50 per cent of tax or of the deficiency tax.<sup>29</sup> Under-declaration of income in an amount exceeding 30 per cent of that declared in the return is prima facie evidence of a false or fraudulent return.<sup>30</sup>

Deficiency interest is the interest payable at a rate of 20 per cent on any amount due or instalment thereof that is not paid on or before the date prescribed for its payment. In the case of failure to pay (1) the amount of the tax due on any return required to be filed, (2) the amount of the tax due on which no return is required, or (3) a deficiency tax, or any surcharge or interest thereon on the due date appearing in the notice and demand of the Commissioner, a delinquency interest at a rate of 20 per cent shall be assessed and collected on the unpaid amount until the amount is fully paid.<sup>31</sup> It must be noted that under regulations interpreting the Tax Code, deficiency interest and delinquency interest run simultaneously after a certain point in time.

Similarly, the LGC imposes administrative penalties for non-compliance with local taxation laws. Local legislature may impose a surcharge not exceeding 25 per cent of the amount of taxes, fees or charges not paid on time and interest at the rate not exceeding 2 per cent per month of the unpaid taxes, fees or charges including surcharges.<sup>32</sup> However, the total interest is capped at 72 per cent.<sup>33</sup>

29 Tax Code, Section 248.

30 Id.

31 Tax Code, Section 249.

32 LGC, Section 168.

33 Id.

In addition, the Tax Code also imposes criminal liability on offences defined in Chapter II of the said law, and both fine and imprisonment are imposed. It is noteworthy that payment of the tax due after apprehension does not constitute a valid defence in any prosecution for violation of any provision of the Tax Code.

Section 254 of the Tax Code defines the common punishable offences. Any person required under the Tax Code or by the rules and regulations promulgated by the BIR to pay any tax, make a return, keep any record, or supply any correct and accurate information, who wilfully fails to pay such tax, make such return, keep such record, or supply such correct and accurate information, or withhold or remit taxes withheld, shall be subject to criminal prosecution.<sup>34</sup> The current administration has been very aggressive in the prosecution of cases for tax evasion through its 'Run After Tax Evaders' programme. As of October 2014, there are 269 pending cases at the Department of Justice.<sup>35</sup> The filing of a criminal action is independent from administrative proceedings. In other words, an assessment of tax deficiency is not a prerequisite to the filing of a criminal complaint.<sup>36</sup> The Tax Code not only criminalises the actual commission of the above-mentioned prohibited activities; it also penalises any person who wilfully aids or abets in its commission or who causes its commission by another.<sup>37</sup>

i Recovering overpaid taxes

Tax refund cases are based on the civil law principle of solutio indebiti. Jurisprudence holds that the time-honoured doctrine that no person shall unjustly enrich himself or herself at the expense of another is enshrined in the basic legal principles. The government is not exempted from the application of this doctrine.<sup>38</sup>

If a taxpayer believes that a national internal revenue tax has been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or that any penalty has been excessively or in any manner wrongfully collected, he or she must file a claim for refund with the BIR. The Tax Code provides that no suit or proceeding shall be filed after the expiration of two years from the date of payment of the tax or penalty, regardless of any supervening cause that may arise after payment.<sup>39</sup> The two-year period is a prescriptive period for both the administrative and judicial claim. For instance, if a claim for a tax refund is filed with the BIR two days before the expiration of the two-year period, the judicial claim must also be filed with the CTA the next day without awaiting the decision of the Commissioner of the BIR. The prescriptive period for refund claims is especially important in this jurisdiction, because the Philippines does not adhere to the common law principle of equitable recoupment wherein tax refund claims barred by prescription may be set off against a current assessment.

38 Commissioner v. Acesite (Phils) Hotel Corporation, GR No. 147295, 16 February 2007.

39 Tax Code, Section 229.

For a refund of local taxes, the prescriptive period is also two years. However, the reckoning point is different; the two-year period is reckoned from payment of taxes or from the date the taxpayer is entitled to a refund.<sup>40</sup>

In the case of value added tax (VAT), the Tax Code provides for slightly different rules on the statute of limitations applicable to refund claims relating to input VAT. A VAT-registered person may claim for a refund of his or her excess input tax arising from zero-rated or effectively zero-rated transactions within two years after the close of the taxable quarter when the sales were made.<sup>41</sup> In proper cases, the Commissioner shall grant a refund within 120 days from the date of submission of complete documents in support of the application for refund.<sup>42</sup> It is the taxpayer (not the Commissioner) who determines what constitutes the relevant supporting documents for the purposes of substantiation of its entitlement to refund, although the Commissioner will not be precluded from requiring additional documents. Otherwise, the 120-day period will be rendered indeterminate or indefinite. However, whether these documents are actually complete as required by the Tax Code is for the Commissioner and the courts to determine.<sup>43</sup>

In the case of a full or partial denial of the claim for a tax refund, or the failure on the part of the Commissioner to act on an application within the period prescribed above, the taxpayer affected may, within 30 days from the receipt of the decision or from the lapse of the 120-day period, appeal the same with the CTA. The Supreme Court has clarified two important principles in the procedure for refund. First, the two-year period is a prescriptive period for the administrative claim for refund. It refers to the application for refunds with the Commissioner and not to appeals made to the CTA. Accordingly, the 30-day period, or any part of it, is not required to coincide within the two-year prescriptive period. Secondly, the 120-day waiting period is mandatory and jurisdictional. The taxpayer cannot appeal to the CTA on the basis of inaction before the expiration of the 120-day period.<sup>44</sup> Under the current regulations, failure by the Commissioner to act upon a claim for refund within the 120-day period shall already be deemed a denial of the application for refund. Moreover, it would appear from ROHM Apollo Semiconductor Philippines v. Commissioner<sup>45</sup> that upon the lapse of the 120-day period without any action on the part of the CIR, the taxpayer does not have the option of waiting for a decision after such period and must file an appeal within 30 days from the lapse of the waiting period.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

As explained in Section II, supra, a taxpayer may file a protest against an FLD/FAN issued by the BIR. Here we focus on the different types of protest that the taxpayer may file to challenge the FLD/FAN. The taxpayer disputing an assessment may file a written request for reconsideration or reinvestigation defined as follows:

43 Commissioner of Internal Revenue, v. Nokia (Philippines), Inc, CTA EB No. 1241, 31 March 2016.

45 GR No. 168950, 14 January 2015.

- a* Request for reconsideration. This refers to a plea of re-evaluation of an assessment on the basis of existing records without the need of additional evidence. It may involve a question of fact or of law, or both.
- b* Request for reinvestigation. This refers to a plea of re-evaluation of an assessment on the basis of newly discovered or additional evidence that a taxpayer intends to present in the reinvestigation. It may also involve a question of fact or of law, or both.<sup>46</sup>

For requests for reinvestigation, the taxpayer shall submit all relevant supporting documents in support of his or her protest within 60 days of the date of filing of the letter of protest; otherwise, the assessment shall become final. The term ‘relevant supporting documents’ refers to those documents necessary to support the legal and factual bases in disputing a tax assessment as determined by the taxpayer. The 60-day period for the submission of all relevant supporting documents is not applicable to requests for reconsideration. A request for reinvestigation will suspend the running of the prescriptive period because it will involve a re-evaluation of the issues based on additional documentary evidence.

iii Claimants

The taxpayer or his or her authorised representative or tax agent may commence any of the remedies against an assessment or a claim for refund.

VI COSTS

There is no specific legislation that allows a taxpayer to recover the cost of litigation from the government, even in cases where the final decision is favourable to the taxpayer. An appeal to the CTA may take years to resolve given the current state of clogged dockets and backlog of work of most of the courts in the Philippines. The filing fee with the CTA is dependent upon the amount of the disputed tax assessment. Hence, tax litigation in this jurisdiction could be very costly.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

The assessment by the BIR may be settled by compromise or abatement.<sup>47</sup> A compromise is essentially a contract whereby the parties by reciprocal concessions avoid a litigation or put an end to one already commenced.<sup>48</sup> The Commissioner is the official vested with the power and discretion to enter into a compromise. It is noteworthy that the authority of the Commissioner is not absolute and is subject to statutory limitations. For example, the compromise settlement of any tax liability is subject to minimum amounts provided by law (e.g., for cases of financial incapacity, a minimum compromise rate equivalent to 10 per cent).<sup>49</sup> Criminal violations already filed in court and those cases involving criminal tax fraud may not be compromised.<sup>50</sup> Under the Tax Code, there are two instances when the Commissioner may compromise the payment of any internal revenue tax: reasonable doubt exists as to the validity of the claim against the taxpayer; or the financial position of the taxpayer demonstrates a clear inability to pay the assessed tax.

The Commissioner may also abate or cancel the whole or any unpaid portion of a tax liability if the assessment is excessive or if the administration costs involved do not justify the collection of the amount due. To abate means to reduce in value while to cancel means to obliterate. The BIR issued RMO No. 7-2015 to adopt and implement a uniform application of the compromise penalties involving violations of the Tax Code. The recent regulation deleted from its coverage certain acts commonly resorted to by taxpayers as a means of tax evasion such as failure to make, file or submit the required summary lists of sales and Annual Alpha List of Employees.

Based on RMO No. 4-2016, the denial of applications for compromise settlement, abatement or cancellation of internal revenue tax liabilities filed by all concerned taxpayers under the respective jurisdiction of the Revenue Regions and Large Taxpayers Service (LTS) shall be considered final, and the outstanding tax liabilities or penalties, or both, shall be immediately collected from the concerned applicant taxpayer.

In practice, it is best to settle at the audit stage if the claim is indefensible, or even if it is defensible but the cost of litigation exceeds the proposed assessment.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

In this jurisdiction, the law draws a distinction between tax avoidance (legitimate tax minimisation) and tax evasion (a scheme used outside of lawful means). Tax avoidance is a method sanctioned by law, and is used by the taxpayer in good faith and at arm's length.<sup>51</sup> Considering that the Philippine tax system is semi-schedular, meaning there are specific rates for specific taxes, an imaginative tax lawyer would typically take advantage of the tax rate differences in drawing a transaction.

Tax evasion, when availed of, would subject the taxpayer to further or additional civil or criminal liabilities. Tax evasion connotes the integration of three factors:

- a* the end to be achieved: in other words, the payment of less than that known by the taxpayer to be legally due, or the non-payment of tax when it is shown that a tax is due;
- b* an accompanying state of mind that is described as being 'evil', in 'bad faith', 'wilful', or 'deliberate and not accidental'; and
- c* a course of action or failure of action that is unlawful.<sup>52</sup>

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

International double taxation arises when a person is subject to tax on the same income by two or more countries for the same tax period. To ease the burden of international double taxation on international trade, the Philippines has entered into a number of bilateral tax treaties with other countries. Basically, a tax treaty seeks to reconcile the national fiscal legislation of the contracting parties and to impose a preferential tax rate on specific taxpayers. The BIR issued RMO No. 01-2000, which outlines the procedure for tax treaty relief application (TTRA). Further, RMO 72-2010, which partially superseded RMO 01-2000, provides that failure to properly file the TTRA with the International Tax Affairs Division of the BIR within the prescribed period shall have the effect of disqualifying the TTRA.

Thus, based on RMO 72-2010, it is mandatory for a taxpayer to seek a ruling of the BIR confirming its eligibility for the preferential tax rates before it can avail of the benefits of the tax treaty. This creates a legal conundrum, because the BIR is, in effect, unilaterally imposing an additional requirement beyond the text of the tax treaty in violation of the Philippines' international obligations. In the 2013 Deutsche Bank AG Manila Branch v. Commissioner case,<sup>53</sup> the Supreme Court held that prior application is not required before a taxpayer can avail itself of the tax treaty benefit. The Supreme Court said that a state that has contracted valid international obligations is bound to make in its legislation those modifications that may be necessary to ensure the fulfilment of the obligations undertaken. The Supreme Court further clarified that failure to strictly observe the procedure under the RMOs should not operate to divest entitlement to the relief lest we violate the international duty to comply with treaty in good faith. The Deutsche Bank ruling has not yet been circularised by the BIR. No clarifying administrative issuance has been issued by the BIR.

Recently, the Supreme Court has reiterated the Deutsche Bank ruling in CBK Power Company Limited v. Commissioner,<sup>54</sup> wherein the Court noted that the TTRA should merely operate to confirm the entitlement of the taxpayer to the relief. It must be noted that both rulings cover a transaction that took place prior to the issuance of RMO 72-2010. To date, the BIR has yet to issue a memorandum circular adopting the Deutsche Bank and CBK Power rulings. The Deutsche Bank and CBK Power rulings notwithstanding, it would still be prudent to comply strictly with the RMOs issued by the BIR.

In the recent Lufthansa German Airlines – Philippine Branch v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue case,<sup>55</sup> the CTA, invoking the Deutsche Bank ruling, held that the BIR's denial of an availment of the special tax rates under the relevant tax treaty for failure to file a tax treaty relief application is without basis. The CTA noted that even if the taxpayer failed to file an application for tax treaty relief, it may still avail of the provisions of the applicable tax treaty as long as it has sufficiently proved its entitlement thereto. It must be noted that in Lufthansa, no tax treaty relief application was filed (in contrast to the belated filing of application in Deutsche Bank). Hence, the CTA may have taken a pragmatic and positive approach in dealing with tax treaty entitlements.

55 Lufthansa German Airlines – Philippine Branch v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, CTA Case No. 8601, 21 March 2016.

However, compliance with the RMOs is encouraged to ensure that a taxpayer will not be subjected to deficiency assessments by the BIR arising solely from non-filing of a TTRA. It is noteworthy that in recent months, the International Tax Affairs Division has accepted applications filed even after the first taxable event.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

In line with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations' integration, initiatives are underway to revise the Tax Code, specifically on income taxation, to achieve a more simplified tax system. There have been initiatives in the Philippine Congress to revisit the current schedular rate on compensation income and to increase the level of tax-exempt income. Recently, the BIR issued Revenue Regulation No. 3-2015 to implement the provisions of Republic Act No. 10653, which increased the total amount of 13 months' pay and other benefits from 30,000 to 82,000 Philippine pesos.

In the area of tax collection, Congress has been studying the enactment of a Bill of Rights of Taxpayers.<sup>56</sup> These rights are in addition to the legal rights and remedies that are provided under the current laws. The Bill also seeks to establish an Office of the Taxpayers Advocate.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Tax litigation remains a dynamic field of law in the Philippines. Generally, the current tax laws provide adequate remedies to taxpayers against erroneous assessments. However, the main challenge for tax practitioners is navigating the many administrative issuances and opinions that arise from the desire to increase tax collections and invariably conflict with the laws they seek to implement.

POLAND

I INTRODUCTION

The Polish tax law system is characterised by tax regulations that are highly complex yet vague and volatile. The large volume of Polish tax acts has contributed further to the complexity of Polish tax law. It is noteworthy that the Polish tax authorities demonstrate a very pro-tax approach, which leads to high potential fees foreseen in cases of the committing of a tax crime or tax violation.

Recently introduced Polish legislation has two main objectives: to improve the current patchwork system through the introduction of (still-too-vague) regulations; and to bring Poland in line with the current global trend to close the remaining loopholes in its tax system through the introduction of various regulations such as a general anti-avoidance rule (GAAR), controlled foreign corporation (CFC) rules, taxation of closed-end funds and new transfer pricing documentation requirements. These factors have an impact on the amount of tax disputes arising between taxpayers and the tax authorities.

Court proceedings involving Polish tax disputes are generally excessively lengthy, and may take up to four years to conclude. The tax authorities are not in favour of less adversarial procedures to resolve these tax disputes (such as mediation or arbitration). Under the current tax law system, tax litigation is rife; consequently, it is rather costly for taxpayers.

The main issue with Polish tax disputes is that although the administrative courts have determined judgments that are favourable for taxpayers, the tax authorities do not always follow these judgements. This causes legal uncertainty, as the tax authorities often present different conclusions to the administrative courts in relation to the same subject matter. This state of affairs has led to an increase in the number of tax disputes between taxpayers and the tax authorities.

The introduction of a new provision in the Tax Ordinance Act in 2015 that reflects the in dubio pro tributario principle has not proved to be of much assistance with this issue. The provision stipulates that if there is a dispute in relation to the interpretation of a given provision, it should be decided in favour of the taxpayer. However, the application of this provision remains a dead letter of Polish tax law.

When the taxpayer wins a case, he or she may expect that he or she will be granted ‘bonuses’ that include a refund of the erroneously charged tax with statutory interest, and a reimbursement of his or her judicial costs (however, the judicial costs are not high). Taking into account the significantly prolonged tax litigation proceedings, and the fact that the taxpayer is exposed to certain risks during the proceedings (especially regarding his or her company or business activity), the above ‘bonuses’ are not satisfactory compensation. Although the taxpayer has a right to seek damages from the State Treasury in civil court, experience shows that not many taxpayers choose to do so (after already having spent many years in the tax offices and administrative courts).

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

i Tax audit

As a Polish tax law general rule, taxpayers in Poland pay their taxes on a self-assessment basis (by filling their VAT tax return or corporate income tax (CIT) or personal income tax (PIT) tax return). A small number of tax obligations arise from decisions issued by the tax authority.

For the above reason, the practice of tax auditing is growing. The main purpose of a tax audit conducted at the tax authority’s initiative is to examine the accuracy of taxpayers’ settlements. A taxpayer must be notified by the tax authority that a tax audit is to be conducted. The tax audit is initiated no earlier than seven, and no later than 30, days from service of the tax audit notice. In certain circumstances, a tax audit may be conducted without prior notification (e.g., a fiscal or commerce offence has been committed).

In most cases, the tax audit is conducted at the audited taxpayer’s registered office or another location where the business activity is performed, or at locations where documents are stored. Therefore, the audited taxpayer should be present while a tax audit is conducted.

The audited taxpayer has the right to actively take part in the tax audit. Particularly, the taxpayer may submit clarifications, present his or her own evidence, or demand consideration of certain documents or other evidence. The audited taxpayer should cooperate with the tax authority to allow it to perform its task effectively (e.g., provide access to documentation and necessary clarifications).

The tax audit must be conducted within the period indicated in the authorisation (i.e., a document authorising the tax authority to initiate a tax audit). According to the Business Freedom Act, the duration of all audits of a business entity conducted during a single calendar year cannot exceed:

- a* for micro-enterprises: two business days;
- b* for small enterprises: 18 business days;
- c* for medium-sized enterprises: 24 business days; and
- d* for large enterprises, 48 business days.

An audit is deemed concluded on the date of delivery of the audit report, which consists of a description of facts and a legal assessment of the case, but which does not constitute a tax liability. When the audited taxpayer does not agree with the audit report, he or she may submit reservations or clarifications within 14 days after service of the report. The authority is obliged to review the taxpayer's reservations and clarifications within 14 days after receiving them from the taxpayer. It should be noted that the taxpayer may not correct a tax return while a tax audit is being conducted. This right is suspended until the delivery of the tax authority's conclusion of a tax audit protocol where all irregularities are indicated. Tax proceedings may be commenced by the tax authority if the audited taxpayer does not correct the tax return.

ii Tax proceedings

The main aim of the tax proceeding is to settle a case by issuing a pertinent decision. To issue the pertinent decision, the tax authority will establish the case facts, collect the most important evidence and make the most appropriate tax assessment. In most cases, tax proceedings are initiated by the tax authority when a tax audit reveals irregularities on the side of the taxpayer (e.g., tax arrears, undisclosed income or improper tax return). Although unusual, tax proceedings may also be initiated upon application of a taxpayer. There are two stages involved in tax proceedings: generally, at the first instance, the tax authority is the tax office (the head of the tax office); and at the next instance (the upper instance), the tax authority is the tax chamber (director of the tax chamber). The date on which proceedings are initiated by the tax authority is the date that the taxpayer is served with the decision to initiate proceedings. A taxpayer has a right to actively participate at each stage of the proceedings (e.g., make demands, comment on the evidence and other materials in the case prior to issuance of a decision, inspect case files).

On the other hand, the tax authority may take all essential actions to clarify all facts during the proceedings and, when it is possible, should resolve the case at first instance. Moreover, the tax authority should provide a taxpayer with all necessary information and clarifications concerning his or her case.

As previously mentioned, the tax authority issues a proper decision at the end of the tax proceeding. However, within seven days of delivery of the notification from the tax authority and prior to the issuance of that decision, the taxpayer has a right to comment on the evidence and materials.

It is worth stressing that every tax decision made at the first instance of proceedings may be appealed and heard at the upper instance (mostly by the director of the tax chamber). To appeal a tax decision, the appeal should be submitted within 14 days from the date of delivery of the decision. A decision is final if a taxpayer does not file an appeal within this time period, and the tax proceeding is then final.

In cases where an appeal is submitted to the upper instance, the upper instance tax authority will settle the case, and its decision will be final and enforceable. That final decision may be challenged by lodging a complaint to the voivodship<sup>2</sup> administrative court (further court proceedings are described in Section III, infra).

iii Fiscal audit

In addition to a tax audit, Polish tax law also recognises a fiscal audit, which concerns more serious matters than tax audits. A fiscal audit may be conducted only at the initiative of a tax authority. It should be noted that under Polish law, a fiscal audit is conducted by a fiscal audit authority pursuant to the Fiscal Audit Act (as distinct from a tax audit conducted by a tax authority, the fiscal audit authority acts more like a 'tax policy'). The main difference between a fiscal audit and a tax audit is the fact that the fiscal audit ends with a substantive outcome (i.e., a decision that may already be challenged to the second instance), whereas a tax audit ends with a formal confirmation of a certain state of affairs, which is not a decision that can be challenged at the upper instance, but may be used in a tax proceeding. A fiscal audit is performed to protect the state budget revenues by establishing an assurance that the tax liabilities are effectively enforced. The rules and procedures for conducting a fiscal audit are similar to those described above in respect of tax audits.

iv Rulings

An individual tax ruling is a very important tool for taxpayers in the Polish tax law system. The main aim of the ruling is to allow a taxpayer to apply to the tax authority for a ruling on whether any planned or actual taxpayer actions, arrangements or transactions comply with the law. As from 2016, an application for a tax ruling may be submitted jointly by two or more taxpayers participating in the same transactions or events. A tax ruling is binding for the tax authorities but not for the taxpayer. In other words, as a rule, tax authorities may not challenge tax settlements of a taxpayer following the letter of the ruling. Confirmation of a taxpayer's standpoint protects a taxpayer from criminal liability and from the obligation to pay interest on tax arrears in cases where the tax authority changes its point of view on that particular matter. Moreover, the biggest advantage of an individual tax ruling is that it may protect a taxpayer from paying tax in circumstances where the taxable event has not already taken place. If the taxpayer obtains an unfavourable tax ruling, he or she may appeal to the voivodship administrative court.

It is noteworthy that from 15 July 2016, the tax authorities will not issue rulings in cases where a potential transaction, action or arrangement raises a justified suspicion that it may be subject to the Polish GAAR or may constitute an abuse of law under the VAT Act. However, the taxpayer has a right to apply for a protective opinion regarding such planned transaction, action or arrangement. A protective opinion will be issued in cases where there is no danger of the GAAR's application. The fee for obtaining such opinion is far more costly than for obtaining an individual tax ruling (a tax ruling costs 40 zlotys, a protective opinion 20,000 zlotys).

The issuance of such opinion also takes much longer than the issuance of the tax ruling (approximately six months; a tax ruling is issued within three months).

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

According to the Polish Constitution, the Polish judiciary consists of two separate branches of courts: courts of general jurisdiction and military courts headed by the Supreme Court; and administrative courts headed by the Supreme Administrative Court. The structure of administrative courts consists of two levels: voivodship administrative courts as courts of lower instance and the Supreme Administrative Court as the court of upper instance. Administrative courts exercise control over administrative activities including decisions and certain administrative provisions, local laws, written interpretations of tax law issued in individual cases by directors of tax chambers, and other acts or state administrative activities concerning powers or obligations arising from law. Administrative courts also hear complaints against the inactivity of the administrative authorities.

There are 16 administrative courts of lower instance and one Supreme Administrative Court, which has its seat in Warsaw. The Supreme Administrative Court is divided into three chambers: the Financial Chamber, the Commercial Chamber and the General Administrative Chamber. The Financial Chamber exercises supervision over the judiciary of voivodship administrative courts on issues of tax liabilities and other money contributions to which tax provisions and provisions on execution of money contributions apply.<sup>3</sup> The Supreme Administrative Court supervises the operation of voivodship administrative courts as regards adjudication in a mode specified by relevant acts, and in particular hears appeals against judgments of those courts.<sup>4</sup>

An important feature of the Polish administrative judiciary is its independence. Administrative court judges are appointed by the President. They exercise their functions independently, and are subject only to the Constitution and other relevant statutes. That supreme supervision over the administrative activities of the administrative courts is exercised by the President of the Supreme Administrative Court is of major importance.<sup>5</sup> The administrative courts should not be dependent on the government administration in any way.

As regards tribunals, the Constitution lists the Constitutional Tribunal and the Tribunal of the State. These two Tribunals are separate organs remaining outside any structural, organisational or procedural associations with the court system in Poland. However, only the Constitutional Tribunal may, to a certain extent, deal with tax disputes, as it adjudicates on:

- a* the constitutionality of national legislation and international agreements;
- b* the compliance of national legislation with international agreements, whose ratification is required prior to approval by parliament;
- c* compliance with the Constitution of legal regulations issued by central state authorities, ratified international agreements and legislative acts;
- d* the constitutionality of the objectives or activities of political parties; and
- e* constitutional complaints.

The Tribunal of the State adjudicates cases in which persons who occupy (or have occupied) the highest positions of state are charged with violating the Constitution or other legislative acts. Therefore, tax matters lie outside of the scope of its actions.

The right to lodge a complaint to the voivodship administrative courts is available to any person who has a legal interest therein, such as a public prosecutor, ombudsman and societal organisations (mostly non-governmental organisations), within the scope of their statutory activities and in matters concerning the legal interests of other persons, provided such an organisation has participated in administrative proceedings. However, it is a necessary pre-condition for lodging a complaint that the complainant has exhausted the means of review in the proceedings before a tax authority.

Complaints against decisions and rulings (and other administrative acts) should be lodged within 30 days of the decision to the voivodship administrative court via the tax authority that issued the decision or ruling in the last instance. When a complaint is lodged, the administrative authority is under an obligation to turn it over to the court with the relevant files and to prepare a response within a period of 30 days from the date of its lodging. The authority analyses the possibility of granting the complaint in whole ('self-inspection procedure'). The complaint is not particularly formalised, since it only has to meet the requirements of a letter in the court proceeding. The voivodship administrative court first examines the formal and legal correctness of the complaint. The complaint will be rejected when the court finds that there are formal obstacles preventing it from hearing the case. When the court finds no formal or legal deficiencies in the complaint, it will examine it. The court may dismiss the complaint, overturn a decision in full or in part, or confirm the invalidity of a decision in whole or in part.

4 Ibidem.

5 Article 12 of the Law on the System of Administrative Courts.

The voivodship administrative court rules within the limits of the case but is not bound by the claims or statements stated in the complaint or the legal grounds raised by the party (i.e., a taxpayer or a tax authority). Consequently, the court will independently assess the correctness of the action or decision of the tax authority and assess the tax authority's compliance with the law. Generally, an administrative court may not alter a decision or rule on merit<sup>6</sup> (i.e., issue a decision instead of the tax authority), but it may instruct a tax authority to re-examine a case.

Often the ruling is issued at the first hearing. The administrative court hears cases on the basis of the file of documents provided by the public authority.

A judgment of the voivodship administrative court may be challenged by a complaint to the Supreme Administrative Court (signed by an attorney, an attorney-in-law or a tax adviser). A cassation appeal is lodged via the voivodship administrative court that issued the judgment within 30 days from service of the judgment together with a justification. The cassation appeal may only be based on strictly defined grounds, namely the violation of substantial law due to an erroneous interpretation or incorrect application of law; or a breach of procedural regulations, if that infringement could have seriously affected the outcome of a particular case.<sup>7</sup> The cassation appeal cannot be based on any irregularity in the proceedings, but only on the infringements that could possibly affect the decision content.<sup>8</sup>

As a rule, a case before the administrative court should be completed as soon as possible. However, the reality is slightly different. Obtaining a hearing date largely depends on the court's location. In small cities a date for an oral hearing is set within two or three months, but in larger cities the date may be set significantly later than this. A taxpayer lodging a complaint at the voivodship administrative court in Warsaw or Krakow will likely wait for approximately one year<sup>9</sup> before the case is considered. A backlog of hundreds of thousands of cases in the Supreme Administrative Court (as it is the only upper administrative court in Poland) causes long delays of up to 18 months in obtaining a hearing date.

The administrative extraordinary measures that may be invoked against final tax decisions are the repeal, amendment or annulment of a decision, as well as the reopening of proceedings. Annulment applies when, for example, a decision was issued by a non-competent authority, without a legal basis or in gross breach of law. Reopening is possible in cases where facts of the case were determined on the basis of false evidence or the taxpayer did not participate in proceedings by no fault of its own.

The levels of appeal are as follows:

- a* administrative procedure: the body of first instance is the head of the tax office; the body of second instance is the director of the tax office; and
- b* procedure before an administrative court: the bodies of first instance are the voivodship administrative courts; the body of second instance is the supreme administrative court.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Under the Polish tax law system, a taxpayer may be subject to both criminal and administrative liabilities at the same time. Criminal penalties are imposed solely by criminal courts, whereas administrative tax penalties are imposed by the tax authorities.

Most criminal tax acts are punished by a fine and, in more serious cases, by imprisonment – usually accompanied by a fine. A forfeiture is an accessorial measure. The fine for tax offences is imposed in daily units. The number of day units is between 10 and 720, and the day unit may vary between approximately €15 and €6,000. The personal and financial situation of the defendant (the taxpayer) should be taken into account by the court when determining the punishment. Imprisonment terms range from five days to five years. Fiscal contraventions are punishable by fines that may not exceed 10 minimum monthly wages (approximately €4,200).

Tax evasion (Article 54 of Penal Fiscal Code) is committed by a taxpayer who evades taxation (nondisclosure of a taxation object to the tax authority or diminution of taxable base and tax). The fine for this penalty is up to 720 day units or imprisonment for up to five years (both are the highest penalties provided for in the Penal Fiscal Code).

Tax fraud (Article 56 of Penal Fiscal Code) is committed by a taxpayer who diminishes the value of his or her tax by filing a tax return with misleading or false information. The penalty is the same as in the case of tax evasion.

Regarding specific tax fraud, an improper return of tax already paid (Article 76 of Penal Fiscal Code) is the most common tax fraud in VAT cases (i.e., carousel fraud). The penalty is the same as for the above-mentioned tax criminal acts. For delays in the payment of tax already collected from the taxpayer by the tax collector (Article 77 of Penal Fiscal Code), the penalty is up to three years of imprisonment.

Administrative penalties in Polish tax law are not legally defined in any legal act.<sup>10</sup> A characteristic feature of administrative penalties is that their function is only prevention. Administrative penalties do not play the role of repression or punishment that criminal penalties do. Polish tax law recognises many examples of administrative penalties, such as higher (sanctional) tax rates or an additional tax obligation. In ‘Administrative versus penal sanctions in Polish tax law – the dual system or two system’,<sup>11</sup> A Nita and A Światłowski point out the following examples:

- a* higher tax rate under the Polish Inheritance and Gift Act: when a taxpayer evades inheritance and gift tax, and only declares the tax base and gift during an audit, tax proceedings, fiscal control, or control activities, the level of the tax rate payable by that taxpayer is always 20 per cent (instead of 7 to 20 per cent); and
- b* the higher tax rate under the Polish Personal Income Tax Act will apply to income or revenue from undisclosed sources. Since the Polish Constitutional Tribunal, in a judgement of 29 July 2014,<sup>12</sup> found this regulation too vague, the Polish legislator has amended the provisions concerning undisclosed source of income to be more precise. Concealed income means income that is covered by disclosed sources, including revenues disclosed by a taxpayer, but that has been declared in the incorrect amount; or income from undisclosed sources, including revenues from sources not declared by a taxpayer.

Tax obligations with respect to income not obtained through disclosed sources or revenue from undisclosed sources arise on the last day of the fiscal year in which that income was gained. When a tax authority, during tax control proceedings, determines a source and an amount of undisclosed income, the taxpayer will be taxed in accordance with the regulations related to the source of that income. Additionally, the taxpayer will be obligated to pay penalty interest and will incur penal sanctions. In cases where it is not possible to determine the source of the above-mentioned revenues, income not covered by disclosed sources or revenue from undisclosed sources will be taxed a flat rate income tax in an amount of 75 per cent of the tax basis (much higher than regular PIT tax rates, i.e., 18 and 32 per cent).

Regarding VAT, an additional tax obligation applies: with the use of cash registers, a taxable person has a duty to keep a record of the turnover and amounts of the output tax. According to Article 111(2) of the Polish Value Added Tax Act, when it is found that a taxable person violates this obligation, the head of a tax office or tax inspection authority will determine, for the period that the obligation was not upheld by the taxable person, an additional tax liability in an amount of 30 per cent of the tax charged upon the acquisition of goods and services. It should be noted, however, that this additional tax liability is not determined in the case of natural persons who, in respect of the same act, bear liability for a fiscal contravention offence or fiscal offence.

i Recovering overpaid tax

An overpayment may arise when undue tax was paid (e.g., although there was no obligation to make a payment, such payment was made) or the payment amount was higher than required. In most cases, an overpayment arises when a taxpayer made an error in tax returns or actual payment. However, it is also possible that the tax authority wrongly assessed the tax duty of a taxpayer. In those situations, a taxable person has a right to ask the tax authority for refund of any overpaid tax.

12 No. P 49/13.

As a general rule, a tax authority is obliged to determine the tax overpayment after a taxpayer submits a request (e.g., a taxpayer questions the tax remitter's right to withhold tax). When specific tax provisions provide that the taxpayer should submit a tax return, he or she must submit a request to the tax authority to determine the tax overpayment together with an amended tax return. The procedure concerning a tax overpayment usually ends with the tax authority's decision, but it is also possible for the tax authority to refund the overpayment without issuing a decision. Depending on the source of overpayment, the time frame for reimbursement ranges from 30 days to three months. However, in practice this period is extended, and the whole procedure may last longer.

There are two situations when a taxpayer is obliged to calculate the amount of overpaid tax:

- a* where the value of overpaid tax is proved when a taxpayer submitted a tax return (this applies to both corporate and income tax returns and excise tax returns); and
- b* where a taxpayer files a separate motion or application for an overpayment reimbursement in cases where an overpayment arose as a consequence of judgments of the European Union Court of Justice or the Polish Constitutional Tribunal (e.g., where a judgment holds that there is no tax duty).

When a taxpayer assesses overpaid tax, the tax authority may verify that amount. If the tax authority does not challenge that overpayment, it should reimburse the overpaid tax within 30 days.

The overpayment, with applicable interest, is credited ex officio towards any tax arrears, including interest for late payment, and any current tax liabilities of a taxpayer. In the above situations, the overpayment is refunded to the taxable person (into his or her bank account or in cash). The taxpayer may also request that the overpayment be credited in whole or in part toward his or her future liabilities. It should be stressed, however, that when other tax proceedings (such as audits) are carried out with respect to the same tax, the overpayment procedure is suspended. The taxpayer's right to seek a refund of an overpayment expires five years after a determination of overpayment.

The overpayment is connected with the issue of interest. In certain cases, when the tax authority is responsible for the overpayment, the taxpayer may demand interest. It should be noted that interest is due only when the overpayment arose as a consequence of a tax authority's decision that was amended or repealed by another decision or by a judgment of the administrative court. Interest for overpayment is the same as it is for tax arrears.

ii Claimants

Tax complaints, claims or appeals may be filed only by the taxpayer on whom the tax is imposed. Tax imposed on a taxpayer cannot be challenged by another person unless that person has succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the taxpayer (i.e., tax succession). This situation may arise in the case of a merger or the split up of a company. The tax liabilities of the absorbed or split company are inherited by the 'new' company. In the case of a tax group, each member of the group is subjected to tax and is obliged to file an individual tax return.

VI COSTS

There is a distinction between administrative fees and costs in tax proceedings. As a rule, the tax authorities do not have influence on the fees to be charged – they are most often determined on the basis of the Act of 16 November 2006 on stamp duty. Conversely, costs in tax proceedings are fixed by the authorities on the basis of the expenditure incurred in connection with the conduct of the proceeding.

Costs related to the conduct of tax proceedings are regulated in the Polish Tax Ordinance Act. As a rule, the costs of proceedings before the tax authorities are incurred by the State Treasury, voivodship, county or district, which leads to the conclusion that these costs will not apply to a controlled taxpayer (during a tax audit or control proceedings). These concern, in particular:

- a* travel expenses and other receivables of witnesses;
- b* expert and translator costs;
- c* costs of inspections; and
- d* costs of delivering official letters.

The tax authority may also include other expenses directly related to resolving the case in the costs of proceedings.

The tax authority refunds the above costs of the proceedings upon request. A request for a refund of travel costs incurred should be submitted to the tax authority conducting the proceedings before the issuing of a decision on the merits, otherwise the claim will be lost.

It should be noted that the above-mentioned costs are borne by the State Treasury when proceedings are initiated ex officio or when a party was mistakenly summoned to appear. This condition is always met in cases of tax audit and control proceedings, which are always initiated ex officio. Tax proceedings may be initiated ex officio or on application by a party. In the latter case, the party bears its own costs.

The Tax Ordinance Act provides a derogation from the general rule that the State Treasury incurs the cost of proceedings before the tax authorities. A taxpayer is charged with costs incurred in its interest, or at its request, but not arising from a statutory obligation of the authorities conducting the proceedings. The likelihood of costs arising that satisfy such conditions is low. It should be noted that the tax authority is obliged to gather and consider evidence. Costs in this regard are not charged to the taxpayer.

The taxpayer is also charged with the following:

- a* costs for preparing copies or excerpts;
- b* costs for the appearance of participants in the proceedings at a hearing that did not take place as a result of an unjustified appearance of the party who submitted an application to conduct a hearing;
- c* costs resulting from concealing or failing to submit evidence by the prescribed deadline;
- d* costs resulting from the provision of false explanations or false testimony; and
- e* costs for translations of documents provided by the taxpayer into the Polish language.

In principle, parties bear their own costs for their involvement in proceedings before the administrative courts. However, a court may award legal aid to a party if such party applies for it prior to or during proceedings. Legal aid takes the form of an exemption from court fees or the appointment of an attorney, an attorney-at-law, a tax adviser or a patent spokesperson.

The Polish legislator has specified two regulations regarding the reimbursement of court proceeding costs at first and second instance. At first instance, the applicant recovers the costs if it wins the case. Costs are not awarded to the tax authority whose action or failure to act is the subject of complaint by the taxpayer, even if the voivodship administrative court dismissed an action brought by the taxpayer (i.e., the case has been successfully completed for the tax authority). The reimbursement of court proceeding costs at the second instance (i.e., at the Supreme Administrative Court) is regulated differently. In that case, the principle of equality is applicable, which means that the unsuccessful party bears the costs of the proceedings.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Alternative dispute resolution is not widely used in disputes between taxpayers and the tax authorities. There are no general provisions pertaining to the mutual agreement procedure (MAP) in the Polish Tax Ordinance Act. The MAP is present only within bilateral tax treaties between countries.

Polish law on proceedings before administrative courts provides only one specific procedure in proceedings before the administrative courts: mediation. Mediation is allowed only when an appeal has been filed with the administrative court, and may be conducted at the request of a complainant or the authority. It is also possible that mediation is initiated ex officio. The deadline for filing a request for mediation is the date of the hearing. As a rule, mediation should be conducted during a single court session. If the mediation ends in failure, and the parties fail to agree on a common position, the case will be resolved through the standard procedure (i.e., it will be referred to a hearing).

When a dispute is effectively settled at mediation, there are two possible outcomes: the court proceeding is discontinued due to the withdrawal of the appeal, or the mediation arrangements may provide an obligation for the administrative authority to verify its decision.

The administrative authority, within the scope of the performance of the mediation, is free to choose how they will proceed. Therefore, a complainant has no influence on the application of such arrangements. Nevertheless, it is possible to file an appeal to a voivodship administrative court against the act or measures taken by authority as a result of the mediation within 30 days.

However, mediation is not a widely used mechanism in the administrative judiciary. Compared with the number of appeals filed with the voivodship administrative courts between 2004 and 2013, mediation proceedings represented 0.4 to 0.1 per cent thereof.<sup>13</sup> In 2014, 10 cases were initiated following the mediation procedure, but only four cases (in the area of tax law and custom law) were settled under that procedure.<sup>14</sup>

Although alternative dispute resolution is not used in Polish tax disputes, rulings are a well-developed part of the tax authorities' practice. A taxpayer may request a tax ruling concerning the current factual status or future events. The tax authorities should issue such rulings within three months of the date of receipt of a request.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Polish law does not provide rules that distinguish between permissible and impermissible tax avoidance. The judiciary has stated that it is practically impossible to determine a clear distinction between when taxpayers avoid taxation in a legal or an illegal way. Each time the judiciary is faced with such a decision, it should be made on the basis of the factual circumstances of a given case and the elements of the particular tax structure. In a judgment of 24 November 2003 in Optimus, the Polish Supreme Administrative Court formulated an argument that whenever the legal system allows a taxpayer to choose from several legal constructions to achieve an economic goal, a selection of the most favourable tax options cannot be treated as the avoidance of tax law.<sup>15</sup>

The Polish tax law system provides tax neutrality for economic events such as a merger or division of companies or exchange of shares. However, the Polish legislator has laid down one condition that such operations should be carried out for valid commercial reasons, and that the main objective or one of the main objectives cannot be tax avoidance or tax evasion.

The fate of a GAAR in Poland seems to be tortuous, but the government finally enacted an anti-abuse rule that came into force on 15 July 2016.<sup>16</sup> The GAAR was created as a new tool for the tax authorities to reclassify business operations where a taxpayer has obtained substantial tax profits through tax avoidance strategies. Achieving a ‘tax benefit’ through artificial arrangements prevents the possibility of applying the anti-abuse rule. The term ‘tax benefit’ should be understood as ‘reducing, avoiding or postponing the taxpayer’s tax liability, creating a tax payment surplus or an entitlement to a tax refund, or increasing the amount of tax payments surplus or tax refund’. To determine whether a legal arrangement is artificial, various factors should be taken into account, such as excessively complex transactions. It should be noted that when a taxpayer obtains a ‘tax benefit’ that does not exceed 100,000 zlotys in a given settlement period, the GAAR will not be applied.

The clause will allow the tax authorities to ignore artificial legal arrangements, which means taxpayers may be obliged to pay the avoided tax with default interest and become exposed to criminal fiscal liability. To protect taxpayers from the tax authorities’ discretionary powers, the Council for Tax Avoidance Matters was created as a collegiate body independent of the tax authorities. At the request of the taxpayer or the competent authority, the Council issues non-binding opinions on whether the GAAR should be applied in any given case. Moreover, the taxpayer may apply to the Minister of Finance to issue an opinion that prevents the application of the GAAR. The cost of this opinion is 20,000 zlotys. The Polish GAAR is applicable as lex generalis to other specific anti-avoidance rules. The Ministry of Finance states that the GAAR should be applied only as a last resort when other measures (i.e., specific-anti abuse rules) fail. Given the early stage of the GAAR’s application, it is difficult to predict how this rule will be applied by the tax authorities and the courts.

15 Supreme Administrative Court, 24 November 2003 (Case No. FSA 3/03).

16 GAAR was originally introduced in the 2003 Tax Ordinance Act, and continued to be applied until May 2004, when the Polish Constitutional Court held that the GAAR provision was unlawful because it did not meet the constitutional requirements of appropriate legislation and repealed this rule. Since then, the Polish tax law system has not had a GAAR until 2016; however, some attempts were made in the past to introduce this clause with regard to closing remaining loopholes in the Polish tax law.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

A fundamental source of interpretation of international agreements, such as double taxation treaties, is the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which was ratified by Poland in 1990. According to Article 31 (1) of the Convention, the Treaty is to be interpreted in good faith, within the ordinary meaning to be given to the provisions of the Treaty and in light of its subject matter and purpose.

When interpreting double taxation treaties, it is important not to lose sight of the OECD Model Tax Convention. While the Convention is not a source of law, it plays an essential role regarding the interpretation of double taxation treaties that are based on the provisions of the Convention. The Supreme Administrative Court has stated that both the OECD Model Tax Convention and the Commentary to the OECD Model Tax Convention may constitute a context in the sense of Article 31 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.<sup>17</sup>

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Recently, the Polish Ministry of Finance presented statistics regarding fiscal audits conducted in the first half of 2016.<sup>18</sup> The fiscal audits were much more efficient in 2016 than in 2015. Auditors are mainly focused on tax fraud (mostly in the VAT context), tax avoidance (harmful tax optimisations) and the issue of transfer pricing.

Poland has struggled with VAT fraud (mostly VAT carousel) for several years, which has had devastating consequences for the State Treasury. Every year, the Polish VAT provisions become more restrictive (planned amendments to VAT are discussed in Section XI, infra). The administrative courts also support the tax authorities in combating unfair taxpayers. The application of the principle of good faith and due care by the taxpayer in his or her contacts with trade partners is rather strictly interpreted by the administrative courts. However, the main problem with VAT fraud is that, in their fight against fraud schemes, the tax authorities reach all companies in the supply chain regardless of whether they knew or could have known about the fraud actions performed by their trade partners. For this reason, tax audits and fiscal audits may potentially affect every taxpayer.

Many tax rulings concern the newest regulations in Polish tax law, such as CFC rules, amended thin capitalisation rules and the tax treatment of widely used cash pooling agreements. The Polish Ministry of Finance is mainly concentrating on closing remaining loopholes in the Polish tax system and combating tax evasion and tax avoidance; therefore, the tax authorities may start using their newest 'weapon', the GAAR, much more broadly.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

As previously mentioned, Polish tax law is frequently amended. As such, Polish taxpayers must be prepared for numerous changes in the tax law area every year. 2017 will bring many significant changes in Polish tax law aimed at combating tax evasion and tax avoidance. The key changes in Polish tax law in 2017 are as follows.

i VAT changes aimed at preventing tax fraud and increasing tax collection

Submitting improper VAT returns (underestimations of output VAT or overestimations of input VAT) will lead to penalties of up to 30 per cent of the VAT underestimation. However, it should be stressed that taxpayers will not be punished when they voluntarily correct their VAT return before a tax audit is initiated. Accounting errors and ‘obvious mistakes’ will not be penalised. The higher amount of the penalty (i.e., 100 per cent of the VAT underestimation in the tax return) will be paid by a taxpayer found to have participated in fraudulent transactions (carousel fraud).

Regarding carousel transactions, it is noteworthy that attorneys and tax advisers who represent a taxpayer in the VAT registration process will be jointly and severally liable for tax arrears due to fraudulent activity that arise in the first six months of the taxpayer’s activity.

To prevent tax fraud in the construction sector, all construction services will also be subject to an obligatory reverse charge mechanism.

Another tool to combat VAT fraud is the imposition of new obligations on entrepreneurs who start running their own businesses. Taxpayers who have ‘virtual offices’ (services of an address provider) will be asked to pay a deposit of 20,000 to 200,000 zlotys.

Further, the Minister of Justice is proposing new penalties for VAT fraud in an amendment to the Penal Code. However, these changes are not in the final version. The current draft amendment to the Polish Penal Code proposes introducing a regulation according to which anyone who alters or falsifies an invoice with an impact on the amount of liabilities due to the State Treasury, or presents such invoice as authentic, may be subject to imprisonment for a term of six months to eight years and a fine. Similar penalties will also be applicable for issuing falsified or fictitious invoices. The degree of punishment depends on the value of such an invoice. In extreme cases, when the invoice exceeds 5 million zlotys, a taxpayer may be subject to imprisonment for up to 25 years.

ii Changes in the issuing of tax rulings

When a taxpayer receives a positive tax ruling from the tax authority and the facts and circumstances of that ruling suggest that the taxpayer will enjoy a tax benefit in January 2017 or later, such ruling will not protect the taxpayer.

iii The National Tax Administration

The Polish legislator introduces key changes on the organisation and operation of the tax authorities. The draft project on the national tax administration proposes the introduction of two main offices: a tax administration office for servicing taxpayers, and a customs taxation office in which fiscal and tax audits will be conducted. An innovation in the conducting of tax proceedings is a change to the rules in relation to appeals. There will no longer be a separate second instance tax authority, as is currently the case (the director of the tax chamber), but the appeal will to be dealt with by the director of the tax office who issued the decision in the first instance. An important element of the amendment of the tax administration will be a taxpayer's right to correct his or her tax return within 14 days of the initiation of a custom tax audit.

iv Taxation of closed-end funds

The amendment of the Personal Income Tax Act and the Corporate Income Tax Act repeal the existing regulations constituting a basis for an exemption from corporate income tax for Polish closed-end investment funds and foreign collective investment institutions of a closed type. However, only closed-end investment funds that are used for tax optimisation purposes (e.g., receive income from participation in partnerships, such as Luxembourg SCSps, and passive income, such as loan interest) will be taxed. They will be taxed at a rate of 19 per cent of PIT or CIT.

v New transfer pricing documentation

Poland follows the OECD base erosion and profit shifting guidelines concerning transfer pricing. Therefore, new requirements concerning transfer pricing documentation entirely reflect the BEPS recommendations. The Polish legislator has introduced a three-phase model of transfer pricing documentation: a local file, a master file and country-by-country reporting.

PORTUGAL

I INTRODUCTION

Tax litigation in Portugal has constituted a heavy burden over the years for the administrative authorities, the judicial courts and, most of all, taxpayers. This burden is attested to not only by the number of cases pending decision (in 2014, there were 52,649 in all the tax courts, as opposed to the 45,728 cases in 2009<sup>2</sup>) but also by their average length, which far exceeds the indicative two years laid down by law.<sup>3</sup> Added to all of this are taxpayer success rates of approximately 50 to 60 per cent in judicial courts<sup>4</sup> and 59 per cent in tax arbitration courts.<sup>5</sup> The immediate interpretation to be made of these rudimentary data is that the Portuguese tax system and, in particular, the tax administration itself, has a propensity towards generating contentious tax situations, a substantial portion of which are subsequently declared illegal by the judicial courts.

There are many reasons for this state of affairs, some of which are endemic. Foremost among them, however, are the growing complexity of the entire tax system, the emergence of new taxes and forms of taxation as a last resort for raising tax revenue, primarily in the past five years, and a tax administration stance and mode of operation overly focused on concerns relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Portuguese tax litigation has several administrative and judicial reaction mechanisms, the most significant of which are the tax claim (an administrative procedure) and the judicial tax claim (court proceedings). In parallel, albeit with a narrower scope of application, there is also tax arbitration, which, although initially introduced into the law as a simple alternative to court proceedings for tax disputes, has acquired especial prominence in its five years of existence.

In essence, tax litigation consists of annulment proceedings, and its quintessential subject matter is tax acts, with tax assessments being of particular significance in this respect.

As a rule, the time limits for contesting tax assessments only begin to run after the final date for voluntary payment, which is generally 30 days after the assessment notice. In cases of assessment where the tax is computed at zero, the time limits for any corresponding litigation begin to run from the time of the notice.

The tax claim is an administrative proceeding before the tax administration and, in general terms, must be lodged within 120 days. The decision in these proceedings may be appealed to the next hierarchical level or tax claim in court, or an application to constitute a tax arbitration court may be filed within time limits of 30 days, three months and 90 days respectively.

Within the field of this administrative litigation, the law establishes, to the benefit of taxpayers, an option aimed at avoiding decisions dragging on eternally: the possibility of lodging a hierarchical appeal, a judicial tax claim or applying for a tax arbitration court to be constituted if the tax administration has not made a decision on the complaint within four months after its filing.

The law provides for situations where access to the judicial courts or arbitration implies prior recourse to administrative litigation, whether by way of a tax claim or through some other administrative procedure. The former includes, inter alia, if certain circumstances are not fulfilled, disputes regarding self-assessments of tax, tax withholding or real estate property valuations, and, with regard to tax withholding, disputes relating to the application of indirect methods for determining the tax base. In either situation, prior administrative litigation is a condition for access to the courts or arbitration.

The judicial tax claim is a process that takes place in the tax courts. It is a relatively simple process, and essentially one that is conducted in writing and with little in-person intervention on the part of lawyers. According to the applicable legal provisions, the key stages of this process are:

- a* filing the statement of claim;
- b* the tax administration's statement of defence;
- c* the taking of expert and witness evidence when requested and not dispensed with;
- d* optional written statements of case; and
- e* the judgment.

This decision may be appealed to a higher court: the Central Administrative Court if it comprises points of fact or points of fact and points of law, or the Supreme Administrative Court if it only comprises points of law. The rulings of either of these higher judicial courts may also be the subject of an appeal, which, due to the admissibility requirements thereof, is 'extraordinary' by nature.

Tax arbitration is, in turn, a relatively recent means of alternative dispute resolution (having been in existence for five years), but has been consolidating its position not only as an instrument to which more and more taxpayers are resorting, but also due to the quality of the awards delivered in arbitration proceedings. Arbitration courts decide in accordance with the law, and there can be no recourse to equity.

The scope of tax arbitration is narrower than that of the judicial courts, given their legal scope and the terms and limits in accordance with which the tax administration may have accepted a binding tax arbitration.<sup>6</sup> The contours of this scope and commitment are essentially the following:

- a* claims for a declaration of illegality of additional tax assessments and self-assessments, tax withholding and payments on account when these latter have been preceded by an administrative process;
- b* claims for a declaration of illegality of decisions that fix the taxable income, when it does not give rise to the assessment of any tax, of decisions determining the taxable base and decisions that fix asset values, with the exception of those that result from the application of indirect methods.

By virtue of that commitment, claims relating to customs duties on imports and related indirect taxes, as well as claims relating to the classification, origin and customs value of goods, are excluded from the scope of tax arbitration.

The commitment is limited further by the value of the disputes themselves, which may not be higher than €10 million. Cases with a value of up to €60,000 are decided by a single arbitrator, while cases in excess of this figure are decided by a panel of three arbitrators.

Two characterising features of tax arbitration are its swiftness and the absence of ordinary appeals (i.e., the right to appeal in tax arbitration is extremely restricted to only exceptional cases).

The swiftness of tax arbitration derives from the fact that there is a six-month time limit for delivering an award after the constitution of a tax arbitration court (deferrable for a further two periods of three months), while on average an award is delivered within four months and 20 days, according to the most up-to-date information.<sup>7</sup>

The Portuguese legal order has no stare decisis rule, but there is a legal principle that the tribunals must respect previous case law in their decisions. For this reason, the swiftness of arbitration proceedings places the awards by these tribunals in a favourable position for defining case law (all the more so because, owing to the limited possibility of appeals, these awards are usually final).

Appeals from arbitral awards are made specifically to judicial courts with jurisdiction over tax matters. The law lays down three possible ways in which to react to an arbitral award: challenging the arbitral award (when it contains flaws that affect its validity), lodging an appeal with the constitutional court (when the application of the rule is rejected on the ground on unconstitutionality, or when the unconstitutionality of the rule that is applied has already been raised) and lodging an appeal based on conflicting rulings (when, in respect of the same fundamental point of law, the award of the arbitration court clashes with a decision of the central administrative courts (CAC) or the Supreme Administrative Court (SAC). In other words, the law entrusts the examination of arbitral awards to the judicial courts in cases where more critical situations are involved, whether because their validity may be affected or they clash with other higher judicial court decisions, or because some constitutional provision or principle is involved.

This is a detraction from the principle of tax arbitration swiftness – because the desired swiftness is affected upon entering the judicial court circuit – for the benefit of a higher system guarantee, since it is aimed at safeguarding the conformity and stability of the legal order itself.

One special rule must be mentioned: the delivery of an arbitral award favourable to a taxpayer's claim immediately terminates the bank guarantee that was provided to suspend collection of the tax debt, regardless of whether an appeal is lodged.

Tax law enshrines certain principles and procedures that, although they cannot be deemed covered by a broad concept of tax litigation, have such a degree of connection with it that taking them into consideration in any analysis is implied. Among other equally relevant principles, we highlight cases of the principle of enforceability of the tax act and of the advance binding information.

The principle of enforceability of tax acts brings about an effect of extreme significance, which is that payment of the additional tax assessed by the tax administration is claimable immediately and may only be suspended if the relevant tax proceedings (whether administrative, judicial or arbitral) are underway and if a guarantee is provided that covers, where applicable, payment of the amount owed.

In other words, from a legal standpoint, litigation is not sufficient to suspend collection of the tax until a judgment declares its illegality. That said, as a rule, the taxpayer will have to pay or provide a guarantee when faced with a tax assessment, even in cases where he or she takes legal action in respect of that assessment. There is, however, an exception to this rule, which involves the possibility of a guarantee dispensation being authorised on an exceptional basis.

This possible dispensation of the guarantee has extremely restrictive prerequisites, since it can only be authorised in the case of such a provision causing irreparable harm to the taxpayer, or where the lack of financial resources is both obvious and not caused by the taxpayer subject to enforcement proceedings.

As a counter to the immediate enforceability of tax acts, however, provision is made for the right to compensation for a taxpayer who, having paid or provided a guarantee, is successful in his or her litigation and the tax administration is deemed liable for the error in the tax assessment. In situations where the taxpayer has paid the additional tax assessment, compensation is effected through the payment of interest,<sup>8</sup> and in cases where a guarantee is provided, by means of payment of the expenses incurred.

It follows from this that the enforceability of tax acts is of particular significance, since a taxpayer faced with a tax assessment has two practically simultaneous decisions imposed on him or her: whether to contest its legality and, consequently, whether to pay or present a guarantee.

As to advance binding information, its significance derives from two fundamental aspects. The first, owing to its very nature, is that of permitting the interpretation and application of the law to be fixed in a specific case binding the tax administration, while the second is the fact that this paves the way for litigation.

8 Currently 4 per cent per year.

In relation to the first aspect, similarly to the situation in other jurisdictions, once this ruling has been issued, the tax administration is prevented from proceeding differently, save in compliance with a court decision. However, the law affords the possibility of the tax administration revoking the ruling after one year subject to a prior hearing for the taxpayer.

The application for advance binding information must contain a description of the facts for which the legal and tax classification is requested, and the ruling will be issued within a 150-day period.

The advance binding information may, in exceptional cases, be urgent in nature. This circumstance gives rise not only to greater speed in issuing the ruling in comparison to the norm (the time limit is 90 days), but also, inter alia, differences in the treatment given to the content of the application for a ruling in terms of costs and the effects of any tacit decision. Effectively, an application for an urgent ruling must, apart from the relevant factual framework, also contain a proposed legal and tax framework. In addition, it implies the payment of a fee that may vary, according to the complexity, from 25 to 250 account units.<sup>9</sup> Finally, if the ruling is not given within the above-mentioned 90-day period, the proposed legal and tax framework for the facts will be deemed tacitly approved as a binding ruling.

The decision underlying the binding ruling may be appealed to the extent that it concerns the non-existence of the assumptions for an urgent binding ruling; the existence of a particular technical complexity that renders a binding ruling impossible; or the legal and tax framework for the facts contained in the reply to the application for a binding ruling.

This possibility of appeal also has a short life span (three years) but, especially in cases where the subject of the appeal concerns the legal and tax framework for the facts, constitutes an extremely relevant step for affording taxpayers all the mechanisms necessary for consolidation of their tax affairs and the relevant operations, without the need to do so solely when faced with tax acts (mainly tax assessments) of the tax administration.

Apart from the principle and procedure described above, there is also a form of tax litigation proceedings that must be highlighted: the figure of opposition to enforcement. Opposition to enforcement is a mechanism that seeks, in essence, to ensure the possibility of reaction by the taxpayer to any illegal forcible collection of a tax (because it is already paid, because the tax obligation is time-barred, for lack of grounds, etc.). Similarly to what is mentioned above, in these cases, too, the collection of the tax is only suspended if, in parallel with the opposition to enforcement, a guarantee is presented or the right to dispensation from the same is recognised.

This opposition to enforcement must be filed within 30 days as of service of the summons on the taxpayer.

However, in this regard we note that despite being a procedural expedient designed specifically for reacting to the illegal collection of a tax – with the law reserving the reaction to the illegality of the tax assessments that underlie it to the tax claim, judicial tax claim and tax arbitration – this same law permits (albeit in exceptional circumstances) that the illegality of the tax assessment may also be disputed through it. This is only possible, however, when the law provides no legal means of challenging or appealing the assessment.

III THE JUDICIAL COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

As stated in the previous section, the three quintessential mechanisms for initiating tax litigation are the tax claim, the judicial tax claim and tax arbitration.

A tax claim is an administrative proceeding before the tax administration and must be decided by the latter. The normal reaction mechanism within the tax administration framework to a decision on a tax complaint is the hierarchical appeal. This appeal, which is optional and has non-suspensive effect, must be lodged within 30 days of the notice of the decision on the complaint – that is to say, its decision is not subject to appeal. Nevertheless, in the specific case of decisions on hierarchical appeals lodged against tax claim decisions, the law expressly provides that these decisions may be appealed to the judicial courts, which is to say that, in such cases, the taxpayer may opt to exhaust the administrative avenues (tax claim and subsequent hierarchical appeal) before transferring the case to the judicial courts.

The tax courts are judicial courts and naturally independent of the tax administration. In these courts, as a rule, there is a double degree of jurisdiction, with cases being weighed up and decided on first by a first instance court and, at an appeal stage, by a higher court, which, as mentioned, may be a CAC or the SAC, depending on the grounds for the appeal.

The decisions of these higher courts may also be appealed but, from an ordinary standpoint, the power of these judicial courts is practically exhausted given the exceptional requirements for lodging further appeals. Nevertheless, we shall elaborate on appeals from judicial tax claim proceedings. They are based on conflicting rulings of the CAC, of the CAC with the SAC, or of the latter with itself. Another reason for appealing is the refusal to review CAC rulings when the questions at issue, owing to their legal or social importance, are of fundamental importance, or when the admission of the appeal is clearly necessary for a better application of the law. Both the appeals mentioned must be decided by the SAC. Finally, if an issue of unconstitutionality has been raised during the proceedings, an appeal may be made to the Constitutional Court.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

The infringement of a tax provision has consequences at levels other than that of the obligation to pay or pass on any outstanding tax. From the outset, the failure to pay or pass on tax may be associated with an obligation to pay compensatory interest,<sup>10</sup> which accrues from the end of the deadline for filing the tax return until such time as the situation is detected or corrected.

There are other consequences relating to administrative or criminal offences. The law provides, in this respect, for a close relationship between a criminal and an administrative offence, whereby the latter applies if the former does not; moreover, the relevant offences are set down in the same legislation.

There are various offences, at both administrative and criminal offence level, but we give particular emphasis to those whose application to specific cases is called upon more often.

10 Currently 4 per cent per year.

Foremost among criminal offences are fraudulent tax evasion and misappropriation of funds; and failure to pay or pass on tax and omissions and inaccuracies in tax returns and other tax-relevant documents on the side of administrative proceedings.

Fraudulent tax evasion is only punishable when the unlawful gain is greater than or equal to €15,000, and penalties vary from a minimum penalty payment of up to 360 days to a maximum five-year term of imprisonment for aggravated fraud.

Certain behaviours aimed at evading the assessment, payment or passing on of tax, or at unduly obtaining tax relief, refunds or other pecuniary advantages capable of causing a fall in tax revenue that may be classified as capable of falling within the offence of fraudulent tax evasion are the following;

- a the concealment or alteration of facts or figures that must be contained in accounting books or records, or of the returns filed or provided for the specific purposes of the tax administration inspecting, determining, assessing or checking the taxable income;
- b the concealment of undeclared facts or figures that should be disclosed to the tax administration; and
- c carrying out a simulated transaction, whether as to its value, its nature, or by interposing, omitting or substituting people.

Misappropriation of funds is punishable if the tax that is not paid or passed on is greater than or equal to €7,500, and carries penalties that vary from a minimum of a 360-day penalty payment to a maximum five-year term of imprisonment.

Noteworthy among the administrative offences is that of failing to pay or pass on tax, which is only applicable if the facts do not constitute a tax crime, and which carries penalties of between 15 per cent and double the amount of the missing tax in the case of individuals, and 30 per cent and quadruple the amount of missing tax in the case of legal persons.

In either case, the fines are subject to a maximum limit of €165,000 for legal persons and €82,500 for individuals in cases where there is intent, and €45,000 for legal persons and €22,500 for individuals in cases of negligence.

For administrative offences involving omissions and inaccuracies in tax returns or other tax-relevant documents, the applicable fines range from a minimum of €93.75 for individuals and €187.50 for legal persons to a maximum of €22,750 for individuals and €45,500 for legal persons.

A reduction of the fines, depending on the time at which it is requested, may be obtained:

Reduction	Base	Request filed
12.5%	Legal minimum amount	Within 30 days after the infringement and, provided that the charge sheet has not been drawn up, a report received or a tax inspection initiated
25%	Legal minimum amount	Within 30 days after the infringement and, provided that the charge sheet has not been drawn up, a report received or a tax inspection initiated
75%	Legal minimum amount	By the end of the tax inspection when the infringement is merely negligent
Legal minimum	Legal minimum amount	By the end of the time limit for defence in administrative offence proceedings in the case of a simple administrative offence
75%	Fixed amount	Before the decision in administrative offence proceedings

Apart from these reductions, the law also provides for the possibility of waiver or special mitigation of the fine. There may be a waiver if the following cumulative conditions are met: the infringement has not generated any actual loss in tax revenue; the situation is now in order; and there is an extremely small degree of fault. Regardless of whether the requirements are fulfilled, the fine may be especially mitigated when the infringer acknowledges his or her responsibility and puts his or her tax affairs in order before the decision in the proceedings.

The taxpayer has a right to appeal any decision to impose a fine to the judicial courts within a 20-day period.

As a rule, if litigation regarding the tax assessment is underway,<sup>11</sup> the criminal and administrative offence proceedings will be stayed until the decision is handed down in that case.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

A self-assessment of tax that has resulted in the payment of more tax than due or the refund of less tax than due may be corrected by filing a tax claim within the time limits and on the terms set down in the Portuguese Administrative and Court Tax Procedure Act (CPPT).

Tax withholding and payments on account may also be contested on grounds of error by means of a tax claim filed on the terms and within the time limits set down in the CPPT. If the tax claim is rejected, the taxpayer may then contest the legality of the act in the tax courts.

On an exceptional basis, the law also permits an ex officio review of tax acts, on the ground of an error attributable to the tax department, or of serious and flagrant injustice, within the time limits and on the terms set down in the General Taxation Law, the rejection of which also opens up the possibility of an appeal to the courts.

As stated above, undue payment of the tax affords a right to the payment of compensatory interest on the terms set down by law in the case of an error attributable to the tax administration departments. However, this right also exists in the case of failure to comply with the legal time limit for ex officio restitution of taxes, delays in the processing of the credit note or in the decision on the review of the tax act. The decisions of the tax administration departments on the payment of compensatory interest or the tax acts issued in respect of the same may also be contested on the terms set down by law.

Apart from the above-mentioned reaction mechanisms, non-resident taxpayers also have a number of legal mechanisms aimed specifically at the recovery of unduly paid tax based on the application of double taxation treaties (DTTs) and EU directives.

In addition, there is a VAT refund system for taxable persons not established in the refunding Member State.<sup>12</sup>

11 In relation to criminal proceedings, the law limits itself to mentioning the judicial tax claim and opposition to enforcement, while in relation to administrative offence proceedings, the law mentions the judicial tax claim, the tax claim and, in certain situations, opposition to enforcement.

12 Decree-Law 186/2009, of 12 August, which transposes into the domestic legal order Council Directive 2008/09/EC, of 12 February.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

In general, tax acts and tax matters are binding and provide no leeway for free appraisal by the tax administration departments. However, tax law sometimes resorts to indeterminate concepts that entail some degree of discretion in the appraisal of the same and in the decision to be delivered by the tax administration.

In such situations, taxpayers may take legal action using the reaction mechanisms, exercising their powers in terms of control and examination of the binding powers of the tax administration and in terms of the reasonableness of the solution adopted by the latter.

This involves a jurisdictional appraisal with a reach that depends inevitably on the circumstances of facts attendant to the specific case. In certain situations, the discretion of the tax administration departments is reduced to nothing, enabling them only to rubber stamp a certain kind of solution.

iii Claimants

The general rule on standing is that any person who has a legally protected interest has standing to take part in administrative and judicial tax proceedings.

In particular, we emphasise the standing of the affected taxpayer to file a tax claim or a judicial tax claim against tax acts, irrespective of the initiative of the taxable person and the standing of the tax substitute to file a tax claim or a judicial tax claim against withholding assessment acts that, although still disputed by the tax administration, has been embraced by tax court jurisprudence.

In terms of stamp duty, when the burden of the tax falls on someone other than the taxable person, the standing of the former to act must also be understood, ultimately in conjunction with the taxable person, with the objective of guaranteeing and ensuring the refund of any undue tax.

VI COSTS

Administrative proceedings, as is the case with tax claims, are not subject to fees or rates. The only exception concerns an increase of up to 5 per cent of the tax base that is the subject matter of the application when there is no reasonable foundation for the complaint.

Actions in the judicial courts imply the payment of a court fee that represents, in average approximate terms, between 3 per cent of the financial value of the action for the amounts of inferior value and 1.2 per cent for the higher amounts.

In tax arbitration, the fees to be paid represent 5 per cent in average approximate terms of the financial value of the action for the amounts of inferior value and 1.3 per cent for the higher amounts.

In the case of success in either judicial or arbitration proceedings, the fee paid is recoverable. In judicial proceedings, the refund is requested from the losing party (tax administration), while in arbitration proceedings it is assured by the arbitration centre itself.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Arbitration is an alternative means of tax dispute resolution. Its main characteristic is its swiftness: the time limit for delivering the arbitral award after a tax arbitration court is constituted is six months. Its greatest limitation, inherent to its very nature, is that there is no ordinary appeal from an arbitral award. Appeals are only allowed on relatively narrow assumptions. Even so, the fact of the admissibility of a request for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) being unquestionable today confers a relative elasticity on arbitration proceedings that, along with their swiftness, has seen recourse to this mechanism grow steadily over the years.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Since 1995, specific anti-abuse provisions on transfer pricing, payments to non-resident entities subject to a more favourable tax system and undercapitalisation have been inserted in the Corporate Income Tax Code. Taxpayer transactions that hint at tax evasion are also combated by the general anti-abuse clause, which implies a devaluation of the sought-after tax consequences in legal and tax terms. There is also a mechanism that seeks to combat the same phenomenon ex ante by way of provisions governing duties of communication, information and clarification to the tax administration by tax consultants and financial entities of pre-fabricated 'aggressive' tax planning schemes to offer clients that seek to obtain a tax advantage.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

Portugal has a network of 77 DTTs, approximately nine of which have yet to come into force. In general, the provisions of the DTTs follow the provisions of the OECD Model Convention. Apart from the DTTs, EU treaties and directives are also of undeniable importance, particularly in harmonisation matters.

The Portuguese legislation is adapted to the relevant provisions in international tax law and EU tax law, and the tax administration supports the more recent positions of the CJEU, although disputes still persist in which the interpretation of treaties and directives, or the conformity of national provisions with the international and EU rules that prevail over them, is argued. This type of dispute can and is often the subject of a request for a preliminary ruling from the CJEU.

In Portugal, there are template forms designed, specifically, to prove satisfaction of the requirements on which the application of DTTs is dependent, which must be certified by the competent tax authorities of the state of residence or accompanied by a document issued by the competent authorities of the relevant state of residence attesting to residence in that state for tax purposes during the period in question and being liable to tax therein. A significant number of disputes also persist in the judicial courts in which the need to obtain and present these forms is contested, which are not unrelated to the difficulties in having the beneficial owners certified in some states of residence.

For the purposes of VAT and without prejudice to EU harmonisation in this field, it must be pointed out that the right to deduction or refund of the excess tax paid or passed on may only be exercised for up to four years after the right to the deduction or the overpayment of the tax, respectively, came into being. In addition, for the purposes of putting tax affairs in order, the law has established a number of requirements and time limits that must be followed for the taxpayer to be able to make the relevant corrections.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

A new trend in recent years has been the application of a general anti-abuse clause. Companies with restructuring operations and shareholdings in non-resident entities may be targets. However, despite the intensified use of this measure, the judicial courts have not yet fleshed out or sufficiently framed the concept of tax abuse owing to the particularities of the specific cases.

The preferred actions of tax inspectors are also VAT refunds and fraud in intra-community acquisitions (carousel fraud), while the financial sector, construction sector and real estate sector usually fly under the tax administration's radar. Given the constraints of the state budget and the imperative need to raise revenue, large taxpayers are one of the main, and openly targeted, focus points.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Over the years, the efficiency of the tax machine has been enhanced, specifically with regard to the mechanisms for collecting taxes, dictated of course by the needs for more tax revenue for the state. This circumstance, whether owing to its dynamics or the exponential increase in tax acts, obviously empowers situations of illegality in the actions of the tax administration. This is increasingly more common today, whether with regard to collections, or to tax inspections and the resulting tax assessments. In addition, a number of taxes have been created in the past six years – largely targeting exclusively specific areas of activity<sup>13</sup> – or changes made to pre-existing ones, the legality, and sometimes, the constitutionality, of which are still under scrutiny by the judicial courts. In this context, the need for speedy and efficient responses in contentious situations has become imperative. Some legal advances have been made through the creation of tax arbitration, sporadic changes in the administrative and judicial tax procedure codes, and even through intervention in the judiciary system. However, tax litigation is still a long way from a suitable response to illegal actions on the part of the tax administration, whether because of the need to create more efficient administrative and judicial tax procedure mechanisms, or by enhancing the response capacity of the judicial courts through the allocation of more human and material resources.

RUSSIA

I INTRODUCTION

Tax disputes are very common in Russia. All large or medium-sized companies have been involved in tax litigation with the authorities at least once, and many companies are involved in tax disputes on a regular basis. For many years now, Russian companies have frequently resorted to litigation to contest tax matters, as the courts have proven to be the most effective venue for resolving tax disputes. Moreover, litigation is generally quite quick, as it usually takes only nine months to a year to pursue a lawsuit through all three judicial instances (and most claims do pass through all three). Recently, however, we have seen a number of changes to this trend, resulting in fewer disputes being litigated as well as increasingly protracted and complicated disputes, making it more difficult for taxpayers to win in court.

A few years ago, the proliferation of tax-related court cases prompted efforts to shift disputes towards the pre-litigation stage. Since a portion of relatively simple or standard disputes are now being settled in pre-litigation, the courts have started hearing fewer but more complex cases. This trend has been evident for the past four to five years. Accordingly, the percentage of cases won by taxpayers has fallen to some extent: prior to 2010, the percentage of cases won was 70 per cent or higher; it currently stands at 30 to 45 per cent. Nevertheless, going to court still remains a popular means of resolving tax disputes.

Most cases arise as the result of a tax audit. Ninety-seven per cent of field tax audits in Russia result in additional tax levies. Recently, many tax audits have resulted in additional levies of under 6 million roubles to 12 million roubles, and in such cases taxpayers often prefer not to contest the additional amounts assessed. If, however, the amount of additional tax assessed is significant and the taxpayer has solid arguments in its favour, then a formal dispute usually arises.

In terms of litigation costs, the state duty is rather small (in most cases, 3,000 roubles to appeal a case, although sometimes this can rise to as much as 200,000 roubles in property claims). Attorneys' fees are largely dependent on the complexity of the case, the existence of relevant case law, the number of charges in the case and the volume of documents to be examined (in Russian tax disputes, documents play a very important role). Many companies offer support in resolving tax disputes, representing a very broad range in terms of pricing and quality. These include the Big Four firms, international law firms, and large and small local companies.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

There are a large number of ambiguities and disputed issues in Russian tax law.

Unfortunately, one cannot obtain an advance clearance or ruling in Russia; accordingly, it is not always possible to avert a dispute in ambiguous cases. Taxpayers can request the Ministry of Finance (MinFin) to give clarification on ambiguous pieces of legislation. However, although it provides exemptions from penalties and fines, MinFin clarification letters in response to such requests are non-binding. Furthermore, MinFin can provide clarification on interpreting the law but does not respond to information requests concerning specific taxpayer situations. Nor does it go into detail on how a specific deal or transaction by a taxpayer should be interpreted for tax purposes.

The only exception is the possibility of concluding a pricing agreement. This option became available to taxpayers in Russia in 2012, when new transfer pricing (TP) rules were introduced. The first pricing agreement was concluded in November 2012, and eight such agreements have been concluded to date. Nevertheless, this option has not become workable in practice because of the unwillingness of tax authorities to conclude such agreements.

Given this inability to obtain any kind of binding clarification, taxpayers must complete their tax returns based on their own understanding of the tax law. If a taxpayer makes an error in completing its return and discovers this error itself, it is entitled to file an adjusted return. There is no deadline for filing adjusted tax returns. However, if because of an error a taxpayer becomes entitled to a refund of overpaid tax, such a refund can be made only if a relevant request is filed with the tax authorities within three years of the tax overpayment. The tax authorities verify that taxpayers have a correct understanding of the tax law during tax audits.

Most disputes initiated by taxpayers in Russia originate either from the results of a tax audit or from a taxpayer's request for a refund of certain tax amounts (refund of overpaid or overcharged taxes, VAT refunds). The following should be considered regarding disputes related to tax audit results.

There are three types of tax audit in Russia:

- a* a desk audit, which is generally a formal review of a tax return conducted within three months after its filing. The tax authorities have only limited rights during this period. As such, disputes resulting from desk audits are rather rare, except for certain categories (e.g., VAT refunds, confirmations of tax benefits and certain other cases);
- b* a special TP audit, which verifies the accuracy of TP calculations. This type of audit was introduced in 2012 under the new TP legislation. The first TP audits were initiated in summer 2014, but to date no decisions have been made in these cases, and thus there have not yet been any disputes regarding these audits. However, we expect such disputes to appear soon, and believe that they will represent one of the most complex types of tax dispute; and

- c field audits, which are the predominant type of audit. The tax authorities can go back three years preceding the year an audit is initiated. It is a full-scope audit. Since 97 per cent of field tax audits result in additional taxes being charged, disputes are very common. Disputes based on field tax audits are usually the largest and most complex.

If the tax authorities discover errors during any type of audit, they will issue a certificate describing the violations committed by the taxpayer. The taxpayer must then generally file its objections to this certificate within one month (20 business days for special TP audits). Objections are considered by the same tax authority, in the taxpayer's presence; the tax authority then issues a final resolution on the audit after reviewing all objections.

If the taxpayer disagrees with the final resolution, it can file an administrative appeal to a higher tax authority within one month. This appeal constitutes a mandatory pre-litigation stage. On average, the higher tax authority takes one to two-and-a-half months to review an appeal. In most cases, the higher tax authority upholds the resolution of the lower authority. However, recently a positive trend has emerged of the tax authorities being more objective when hearing appeals and more frequently supporting the taxpayer's position. Once a taxpayer has filed such an administrative appeal with a higher tax authority, it will then have no liability to pay the additionally assessed tax until its appeal has been heard. If the taxpayer fails to file an appeal within the one-month time frame, however, then the tax authority's decision will take effect and the additionally assessed tax may be collected from the taxpayer. However, the taxpayer can still file an appeal with the higher tax authority within one year from the date on which the decision was adopted, to comply with the procedure for a mandatory pre-litigation appeal.

A taxpayer can bring its case to court within three months of obtaining an unfavourable ruling from a higher tax authority. To initiate litigation, a taxpayer files a motion to dismiss the ruling with the court of first instance. The taxpayer may not go to court, however, if the pre-litigation procedure has not been followed.

Another major group of disputes relate to receiving cash funds from the state budget. The most common types are disputes related to refunding or offsetting overpaid tax; refunding or offsetting overcharged tax; and VAT recovery.

Usually, these disputes arise in two instances: the tax authority resolves to deny a refund or offset of tax (resolution to deny VAT recovery); or the tax authority takes no action and does not issue a resolution on refunding or offsetting tax, although it is obligated to refund and offset the relevant tax (refund VAT).

In the first instance, taxpayers can appeal against the tax authority's resolution denying the refund or offset of tax (denying VAT recovery). To appeal against such resolutions, taxpayers must first file with the higher tax authority (within one year of obtaining the resolution), and only then with the court (within three months of obtaining the higher tax authority's resolution).

In the second instance, taxpayers can file a complaint about the tax authorities' inaction with the higher tax authority (within one year; however, there is some uncertainty regarding when exactly the one-year period should begin – in most cases, in practice the period begins from the tax authorities' deadline for adopting a relevant resolution), and only then file with a court (within three months of obtaining the higher tax authority's resolution).

In either case, when filing an appeal with a court, taxpayers often file a second (property) claim: that is, in addition to filing a motion to dismiss a relevant resolution (complaint about inaction), taxpayers also ask the court to obligate the tax authority to adopt a resolution on refunding (offsetting) the tax. Property claims can be filed within three years of the date of tax overpayment or overcharging of tax. The second claim simplifies the subsequent enforcement of the court's decision. Property claims are also filed independently (e.g., when the deadline for filing the first (non-property) claim is missed, or if a taxpayer is seeking to avoid the pre-litigation procedure). Property claims have some procedural specifics; in such situations, courts may take differing approaches to the legality of filing a property claim.

In addition to the disputes described above (based on audit results and to obtain tax amounts from the budget), taxpayers may initiate other disputes. Taxpayers can appeal against other unlawful non-regulatory acts, actions and omissions of the tax authorities (including requests for payments, resolutions to recover, inaction on issuing a resolution). The appeal procedure is on the whole identical to that for appealing a tax audit decision. First, one must file an appeal with the higher tax authority within one year, and then file with a court within three months from the date one receives the higher tax authority's decision.

Another type of dispute involves appealing against regulatory acts. In the case of tax disputes, if the law is ambiguous, taxpayers or the tax authorities can request clarification letters from MinFin, or MinFin can provide clarifications independently. In certain cases, clarification letters are binding on the tax authorities. If such letters violate taxpayers' rights, taxpayers can appeal against them as if they were regulatory acts. In this case, appeals should be filed with the Russian Federation Supreme Court (SC) (the highest judicial instance for civil cases and, since 6 August 2014, for commercial cases as well).

Taxpayers can sometimes purposefully instigate a tax dispute. This could be necessary to test a specific disputable position if the taxpayer is not certain its position is correct, and is seeking to verify its validity in court without waiting for a field tax audit (which could occur after two to three years), and further does not want to assume the risk of liability. To instigate a dispute, the taxpayer files tax returns and purposefully does not claim any tax benefit (expenses, benefits, etc.), and pays the entire tax amount listed in the returns. After a certain period, the taxpayer then files adjusted returns in which it additionally claims the relevant tax benefit (expenses, benefits, etc.) that it did not claim before, and requests a refund of the overpaid tax amount. Since the tax authorities are not eager to refund taxes, they would most probably search for reasons not to refund the tax, issue a resolution to deny the tax refund or simply do nothing.

The taxpayer can appeal against a resolution to deny a refund of overpaid tax or the inaction of the tax authorities. Such a dispute could result in the setting of an interesting judicial precedent that is important for the taxpayer (although Russia is not formally a common law country, the courts do seek to establish uniform judicial practice, and the positions of the highest judicial instances effectively serve as virtual precedents). If the case is won, the taxpayer can then safely use the relevant tax benefit in future. If the case is lost, the taxpayer can avoid penalties and clarify the law more quickly than if the dispute had only arisen during a field tax audit. However, the tax authorities do not always respond as expected to such an instigation, and may refund overpaid tax without a dispute only to challenge the claimed benefit or expense at a later date during a field tax audit.

All of the above by and large applies for both legal entities and individuals; however, there are some differences:

- a* legal entities and entrepreneurs litigate in arbitrazh courts, whereas individuals litigate in general jurisdiction courts (see Section III, infra); and
- b* legal entities and entrepreneurs litigate extensively, and initiate most tax disputes, while individuals litigate much less in disputes, and such disputes are largely initiated by the tax authorities. This is because the tax authorities can levy additional taxes on legal entities and entrepreneurs using the pre-litigation procedure, but on individuals only through litigation. Thus, individuals need not initiate disputes on their own.

The above-mentioned disputes are initiated by taxpayers. Disputes initiated by the tax authorities include disputes concerning the collection of taxes, penalties and fees when they cannot be collected out of court (e.g., from individuals, and when a relevant statute of limitations is missed for legal entities). The tax authorities can also initiate some other types of disputes (e.g., to recover damages caused to the state due to a bank unlawfully debiting a taxpayer's account after receiving a resolution by the tax authorities to suspend transactions, which prevents the tax authorities from collecting arrears, overdue penalties and fines as provided by the Tax Code), but they are infrequent and of a rather specific nature.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

As noted in Section II, supra, based on tax audit results, the tax authorities issue a certificate against which taxpayers can appeal. The final audit resolution is issued only after the taxpayer's counterarguments are heard. If a taxpayer has not been given a chance to appeal, or the proper procedure was not been observed when its counterarguments were heard, this constitutes unconditional grounds for revoking the tax authorities' audit resolution.

Once the tax authorities issue their final audit resolution, they cannot amend it in any way that would put the taxpayer at a disadvantage, but may amend it to the taxpayer's advantage (e.g., reduce the amount of additional tax assessed or cancel it altogether).

If a taxpayer disagrees with the resolution, it must appeal to the higher tax authority, which represents the obligatory pre-litigation stage. The same applies to appeals of any other non-regulatory resolutions by the tax authorities, or their actions or omissions. After observing the mandatory pre-litigation procedure, taxpayers can take their cases to court.

Tax disputes between the tax authorities and legal entities and entrepreneurs are heard in arbitrazh courts. The arbitrazh court system consists of three tiers. The first instance tier is usually a court at the level of one of Russia's 85 constituent regions. Appeals against resolutions of a first instance court can be made to the appellate instance (there are 21 appellate courts). Appeals against resolutions of an appellate court can be made to the cassation instance (there are 10 cassation courts). Regular tax disputes go through these three tiers.

From 6 August 2014, the fourth ('second' cassation) and the fifth (supervisory) instance are in the SC, which is now the highest judicial instance for hearing tax disputes (previously it was the Supreme Arbitrazh Court (SAC), which was disbanded on 6 August 2014).

In most cases, to defend its position a corporate taxpayer files a claim with the arbitrazh court of first instance (except for claims contesting regulatory acts issued by state bodies, which are filed directly with the SC). If the tax authorities want to initiate a tax dispute against a legal entity or an entrepreneur, they also file with the arbitrazh court of first instance. The filing is made in the defendant's local court.

The case is considered on its merits by a single judge in the court of first instance. In some Russian constituent regions (e.g., Moscow, St Petersburg), judges specialise in tax litigation. In other constituent regions, there is no tax specialisation (tax specialisation is not mandatory for court judges). Consideration of a dispute starts with a preliminary court hearing. At the preliminary hearing, parties present their key evidence and argue their positions, after which the court starts the main session. A typical case would have one preliminary hearing and two to four main sessions. It takes three to five months for a dispute to progress through the first instance, but this process may take longer (up to a year and even longer) for complicated disputes. Disputes are usually based on an in-depth analysis of documents (evidence), which are the primary evidence (legal proceedings in general are very document-intensive). Examinations of witnesses and experts are not often conducted during court hearings. However, recently such examinations have begun to occur more frequently, reflecting the fact that tax disputes are becoming increasingly complex. The burden of proof in disputes on invalidating non-regulatory acts of the tax authorities lies with the latter (i.e., the tax authorities must prove the validity of their decisions). In practice, however, taxpayers must establish the legitimacy of their position and the illegitimacy of the tax authorities' position. Consideration of a case in the first instance concludes with the issuing of a relevant court decision.

The losing party can appeal against the decision to the appellate court. This must be done within one month of the date the first instance court's decision was issued. If an appeal is filed, the relevant first instance court decision does not take effect until the appellate instance court has ruled on the case. A three-judge panel hears tax disputes at the appellate instance. A dispute is usually considered during a single hearing. Additional evidence cannot generally be presented to the appellate court, except when it could not be presented to the court of first instance. The appellate court considers a case within one to two months after the appeal is filed. Based on the results, a resolution is then issued.

The losing party can appeal against the appellate court decision to the cassation instance. The relevant cassation appeal must be filed within two months of the date that the full appellate resolution is issued. A three-judge panel considers cases at the cassation instance. The cassation court reviews the correctness of the legal provisions applied by the lower courts, but does not check the facts of the case (although in practice, the facts of the case are also sometimes reviewed). The cassation court usually considers a case during a single hearing that takes place within one to two months of the date the cassation appeal was filed. If the claimant complies with the filing deadlines and certain procedures, both the appellate and cassation courts must accept the appeal for review and consider it.

Should the losing party disagree with the court resolutions, it can take its case to the SC (previously the SAC).

The latest amendments to Russian law have established a new two-stage procedure for appealing arbitrazh court rulings to the supreme judicial authority: in the second cassation instance, and in accordance with a supervisory procedure.

Effective August 2014, a cassation appeal to the Judicial Board of the Russian Supreme Court (SC Judicial Board) represents the fourth level for hearing tax disputes.

A cassation appeal may be filed to the SC Judicial Board within two months from the date on which the latest ruling subject to appeal came into force. Such a cassation appeal is considered individually on a preliminary basis by an SC judge, who decides whether to escalate the case to the SC Judicial Board. The SC judge issues a relevant ruling within two months (without a writ of certiorari) or three months (if a writ of certiorari was issued).

Thus, the SC Judicial Board does not consider all appeals filed by taxpayers or the tax authorities of decisions issued by the lower courts. A case is sent for reconsideration only if an SC judge identifies grounds for such a re-hearing at the preliminary stage.

If a case goes to the SC Judicial Board for consideration, the Board must consider its merits within two months. Upon considering a cassation appeal, the Board issues a ruling on the case, which comes into force from the date it is issued.

Only a significant breach of substantive or procedural law by arbitrazh courts may serve as grounds for the SC Judicial Board to invalidate the rulings of such courts during a second cassation procedure.

A ruling issued by the SC Judicial Board after considering a second cassation appeal may be appealed within three months in accordance with the supervisory procedure of the SC Presidium.

A supervisory appeal is considered individually by an SC judge within two months (without a writ of certiorari) or three months (if a writ of certiorari was issued). Following that, the judge issues an individual judgement on whether the case should be escalated to the SC Presidium, issuing a relevant ruling. If a case is escalated to the SC Presidium, the latter considers the merits of the supervisory appeal within two months.

Any breach in the uniformity of the courts' application and interpretation of legislative provisions, civil and political rights, and the rights and legitimate interests of the general public and other public interests, may serve as grounds for invalidating previously-issued SC Presidium rulings.

Following its consideration of the case, the SC Presidium issues a resolution that comes into force immediately and may not be appealed.

The SC Chair or his or her deputy may, based on an appeal filed by interested parties, make recommendations to the SC Presidium for reconsidering judicial resolutions under the supervisory procedure 'for the purposes of eliminating fundamental breaches of substantive and/or procedural law'. Such appeals may be filed within four months from the date on which the appealed court resolution came into force.

In addition, the SC Chair or his or her deputy may, at their own discretion, invalidate the rulings that decline to escalate a cassation appeal to the SC Judicial Board; decline to escalate a supervisory appeal to the SC Presidium; and reinstate a missed deadline for filing a second cassation appeal.

Currently, there is no quantitative data regarding the number of cases appealed at the second cassation level, but there is reason to believe that the percentage of such cases is the same or less than previously, when cases were submitted to the Supreme Arbitrazh Court. Thus, probably no more than 1 per cent of all cases are appealed at the second cassation level. Since August 2014, no cases have been submitted for supervisory appeal, and it is likely that there would only be a handful of such cases. Although Russia is not formally a common law country, SC Judicial Board rulings, SC Presidium resolutions and SAC Presidium resolutions effectively serve as judicial precedents. Thus, if the SC Judicial Board, SC Presidium or SAC Presidium have expressed their opinion on a given issue, the lower courts will most likely take a similar position in cases concerning this issue.

Tax disputes with individuals are considered by general jurisdiction courts. Disputes are usually initiated by the tax authorities, since collecting taxes, penalties and fines from individuals is only possible through litigation.

To collect taxes from an individual, the tax authorities file an application for a court order with a justice of the peace, who then issues the relevant court order and sends it to the individual's address. The individual can appeal against the court order within 10 days. If the individual fails to make such appeal, the court order is sent to the tax authorities or to a bailiff for execution. If the individual then sends his or her counterarguments to the justice of the peace, the latter must recall the order, and the tax authorities must bring the case to a general jurisdiction court under the ordinary procedure.

The application is filed with a district court. An appeal against the decision of a district court that has not taken effect can be made to the appellate court within one month from the date of the decision. The appeal must be considered. Appeals against district court resolutions are considered by the supreme court of the relevant Russian constituent region. If a losing party disagrees with the appellate court decision, an appeal can be filed with the cassation court within six months from the date of the appellate court decision. A judge refers the appeal to the cassation court only when there are grounds for reviewing the court decision. Appeals are considered by the presidium of the relevant constituent region's supreme court.

If a taxpayer has exhausted all other possible options for defending its rights in a tax dispute, and there are grounds to believe that in considering the dispute legal provisions or interpretations were used that violate general constitutional principles, the taxpayer can bring its case to the Constitutional Court. Such an action would, however, be the exception. Nevertheless, there have been cases where a taxpayer has succeeded in upholding his or her interests only through taking his or her case to the Constitutional Court.

Interpretations of regulations given by the Constitutional Court are generally binding, and must be applied by all state authorities and other participants in legal relationships.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Under the Tax Code, in certain cases taxpayers and tax agents may be subject to tax liability. Liability has been established, inter alia, for:

- a* non-payment of tax in an amount of 20 per cent;
- b* failure to file tax returns as a percentage of the tax amount due that was not paid under the returns;
- c* failure to submit documents to the tax authorities (200 roubles per document);
- d* doing business without registering with the tax authorities as a percentage of the income earned from such business activity; and
- e* failure to perform the responsibilities of a tax agent in an amount of 20 per cent of the amount of tax not withheld.

Penalties can be collected out of court from corporate taxpayers and sole proprietors, but can be collected from individuals only through court proceedings. The statute of limitations is three years after the tax period when the offence took place or from the date of the offence. Once the statute of limitations expires, the taxpayer cannot be held liable for the offence.

The Tax Code provides grounds for taxpayers to be exempted from liability, specifically by following the clarifications of an authorised government body. Taxpayers can request clarifications on tax law from MinFin and in certain cases from the tax authorities. Although such clarifications are not binding, they can exempt the taxpayer from penalties if he or she has complied with their guidelines. Ad hoc clarifications exempt taxpayers from penalties. If clarifications are provided to another taxpayer, but are forwarded by MinFin to the tax authorities and are entered into information databases, they can also serve as grounds for avoiding penalties.

The most widespread penalty is for failure to pay taxes (the penalty amounts to 20 per cent of the additionally charged tax). However, this penalty cannot be applied if the taxpayer overpaid in an amount exceeding the amount of additional tax charged. The overpayment should coincide in time with the failure to pay the tax, and exist until a relevant resolution is issued by the tax authorities. In this case, the budget does not incur any losses, and thus there are no grounds for holding the taxpayer liable. In practice, taxpayers often maintain a certain amount of overpayment to the budget without claiming it back as a means of protecting themselves from penalties.

In addition, the late payment of tax results in additional fees calculated as a percentage of the unpaid tax amount. Officially, this fee is not considered a type of liability. Rather, it is a compensatory payment charged for using the funds.

Fines are very common. Typically, in the case of a violation where the taxpayer is charged additional tax, it will also be charged an additional fee. The taxpayer will also be held liable for non-payment of tax at a rate of 20 per cent of the unpaid amount. Compliance with the clarifications of an authorised body or overpayment can provide exemption from additional fines.

If a legal entity is subject to a tax liability, penalties are charged to the entity itself and not to its corporate officers. Corporate officers can be held administratively liable under the Code of Administrative Offences but not under the Tax Code. Penalties have been established for corporate officers for violating filing deadlines, failing to provide information for tax control purposes, failing to meet the deadline for registering with the tax authorities and in certain other cases. Penalty amounts charged to corporate officers for such violations generally range from 100 to 3,000 roubles.

In addition to tax liability, tax evasion can result in criminal liability. Only individuals can be subject to criminal liability; legal entities cannot be held criminally liable. If a legal entity fails to pay taxes, its general director and chief accountant, along with other officers in certain cases, can be held liable.

The minimum unpaid tax amount prompting the application of criminal liability is 2 million roubles for legal entities and 600,000 roubles for individuals. The statute of limitations for such cases is seven or 10 years, depending on the amount of unpaid tax.

The following must be considered. In 2014, the procedure for bringing criminal charges in relation to tax crimes changed. There is now no need to obtain audit materials from the tax authorities to bring such charges; law enforcement agencies may uncover and investigate instances of non-payment of taxes independently. A positive law provision here is that if a taxpayer voluntarily pays the additionally charged tax, the tax authorities are not obligated to refer the case to the relevant bodies for investigating tax offences. Even if a case is opened, the case must be closed if the additional tax is paid and it is the violator's first such offence.

Criminal liability also applies to tax agents for failure to withhold tax, or concealment of funds to be used to pay taxes.

There is no civil liability for non-payment of taxes. Generally, any tax liability (including payment of additionally assessed taxes, fines and late payment interest, if any) should be borne by a taxpayer (in its own name and by its own funds) but not by any other third parties (i.e., any other companies or individuals). Therefore, if a company owes tax, it must be paid only by the company itself. Since each entity must carry its tax burden independently, along with bearing liability for tax offences, the possibility of compensating another entity for taxes is disputable. The Tax Code defines only a few additional cases (to be resolved only in court) when third parties can be obliged to pay taxes, penalties and late payment interest instead of a taxpayer:

- a* if a company is undergoing liquidation and its funds are insufficient for proper fulfilment of its tax obligations, the founders of the company should pay taxes, fines and late payment interest to the budget in cases provided by civil law (i.e., when the company's insolvency (bankruptcy) was caused by their actions);

- b* if a subsidiary is unable to pay taxes (fines, late payment interest) for a period exceeding three months, and income from its business activity is received by a parent company (or cash or assets were transferred to the parent company after a tax audit was scheduled), the latter can be compelled by court order to pay the tax obligations of its subsidiary; and
- c* if a company is reorganised, its tax obligations are transferred to its legal successors.

Collection of tax payments assessed in respect of a taxpayer from other companies or individuals is quite rare in practice.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

In Russia, companies are entitled to refunds (or offsets against future payments) of overpaid or overcharged tax. Overpaid tax arises because of voluntary erroneous overpayment, while overcharged tax arises because of erroneous compulsory collection. A company is eligible for a tax refund only if it has no arrears for the relevant (or any other) tax. An offset against future payments can be made for this or any other tax of the same type; overpayments of federal taxes can be offset against federal taxes, but not against regional or local taxes.

To obtain a refund for overpaid taxes, a company must provide documents confirming that the taxes were actually overpaid. The company must also apply for a refund or offset of the overpaid tax within three years after the overpayment was made. If the three-year deadline to submit an application for a tax refund or offset is missed, the company can no longer claim it.

If the tax authorities fail to offset or refund the overpaid tax on time, the taxpayer can apply to a higher tax authority to invalidate the omission of the lower tax authority, and then to a court to invalidate the omission and compel the tax authorities to refund the overpaid tax amount. If the tax authorities unlawfully deny an offset or refund of overpaid tax, an appeal against such a denial can be made to a higher tax authority and then to a court. A motion filed in court can also contain a property claim for a tax refund. Interest is charged on the overpaid tax.

An overpayment can also arise because of an error during tax itemisation or due to adjusted returns filed by a company for prior periods claiming additional tax benefits. In such cases, the adjusted tax returns can be reviewed during a desk audit or a regular field audit, or a follow-up field audit if the initial audit was performed before the adjusted tax returns were filed.

To recover the overpaid tax, the company must file an application with the tax authorities within one month of the overpaid tax being collected, or with a court within three years of the overpaid tax being collected.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Appeals of tax authority decisions are very common. In practice, appeals against non-regulatory certificates of the tax authorities can be made both on formal grounds (when the tax authorities fail to comply with procedures, deadlines and formal requirements as stipulated in the Tax Code) and on the merits.

Appeals against some certificates issued by the tax authorities can only be made on formal grounds. For example, if the tax authorities issue a resolution on charging additional tax, and based on this resolution a tax payment notice is generated, an appeal against the notice can be made only on formal grounds (e.g., violation of the deadline for issuing the notice, required information missing in the notice). However, in appealing against the notice, the taxpayer cannot appeal against additional taxes being charged on the merits. To appeal against the grounds for additional tax being charged, the taxpayer must dispute the initial resolution, stating all circumstances that resulted in additional taxes.

When appealing against a tax authority resolution, taxpayers can cite its inconsistency with Russian tax law, international treaties of the Russian Federation and the Constitution.

If any provision of Russian tax law is found to be unconstitutional, it becomes invalid retroactively; in adopting resolutions, the tax authorities cannot apply unconstitutional legal provisions or apply an interpretation of tax law provisions that differs from the Constitutional Court's interpretation.

When appealing against non-regulatory certificates, it is important to remember that the pre-litigation stage is mandatory, and a non-compliant taxpayer loses its right to litigate.

The deadline for appealing against a non-regulatory resolution to a higher tax authority is one year from the date the relevant resolution was issued, and to a court it is three months from the date of the higher tax authority's decision.

iii Claimants

Court claims are filed by entities whose rights have been violated.

Appeals against non-regulatory tax authority certificates can be made by the entities that the given certificate concerns (i.e., the entity charged under the certificate with additional liability).

An application for a refund of overpaid tax can be filed by the taxpayer who overpaid the tax. Payment of taxes must be made by the taxpayer independently (using its own funds); no third-party tax payments are allowed. As such, if a company (Company A) makes a tax payment for another company (Company B), Company A incurs excessive tax that it can refund, while Company B would still have taxes due, which it must pay independently.

If a tax agent withheld and paid an excessive tax amount, the application to refund the overpaid tax can be filed by the taxpayer or by the tax agent. If overcharged tax is refunded to the tax agent, it must repay this tax to the taxpayer.

If a company remitted excessive VAT to its contractor, the company can demand the excessive VAT amount from the contractor. For example, Company A provides services to Company B and charges 18 per cent VAT on such services. Company B pays VAT to Company A in full and claims a refund of the VAT paid. The tax authorities audit Company B, and indicate that the services provided were subject to zero per cent tax; thus, Company B should not have paid VAT to Company A. Accordingly, Company B has invalidly claimed VAT as being exempt.

Company B loses its litigated dispute with the tax authorities. The court confirms that Company B could not have exempted VAT, as the services acquired were subject to zero per cent tax, and Company B should not have paid VAT to Company A at the 18 per cent rate. Company B files a claim against Company A for repayment of improper enrichment (excessively paid VAT). The court sustains Company B's claim and orders Company A to repay the excessive VAT amount. In this situation, Company A could submit an adjusted VAT return applying the zero per cent rate to the disputed services (provided the relevant documents are available) and not the 18 per cent rate, and petition the tax authorities for repayment of the overpaid tax.

VI COSTS

The main costs that a company incurs in relation to a tax dispute are the state duty, representation and other legal expenses.

The state duty charged in tax disputes is rather low (see Section I, supra), and is paid by the losing party.

The cost of representation and other legal expenses can be substantial, depending on the complexity of the dispute.

The law provides for charging reasonable legal expenses to the losing party in tax disputes. In practice, until recently taxpayers usually did not demand compensation for representation and other expenses. However, recently we have seen a relevant practice beginning to develop; taxpayers have started demanding compensation for legal expenses (including representation expenses) more frequently. In some cases, the courts have ordered the tax authorities to compensate rather large amounts (up to 3 million roubles), but in most cases the courts charge the losing party with negligible expenses, recognising actual expenses as unreasonable and reducing the amounts of actual expenses by five or 10 times (or more). In certain cases, the courts have ordered the losing taxpayer to compensate expenses incurred by the tax authorities (e.g., expenses incurred by the authority's employees in travelling to the litigation venue), but such cases are infrequent.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

The main methods for resolving tax disputes in Russia are appeals to a higher tax authority or litigation. Virtually no other dispute resolution alternatives are used.

It is not possible to obtain a mandatory preliminary clarification or ruling. However, Russia's new Transfer Pricing Law, which took effect in 2012, allows for pricing agreements. During 2013, eight pricing agreements were concluded, and some more took place in the following years. Nevertheless, this tool has not become very popular because there are a lot of bureaucratic obstacles to conclude such agreement.

Simultaneously with the new Transfer Pricing Law, the concept of a consolidated group of taxpayers was introduced in the Tax Code. Using consolidated groups of taxpayers prevents TP disputes regarding transactions among group members. Accordingly, the agreement establishing a consolidated group of taxpayers can also be viewed as an alternative resolution method for TP disputes. However, the current criteria for establishing consolidated groups of taxpayers are very high (e.g., aggregate assets valued over 300 billion roubles, aggregate annual taxes of over 10 billion roubles), so only a limited number of companies can use this option.

Double taxation treaties between Russia and other countries also allow for a mutual agreement procedure (MAP). In practice, the MAP is not very popular, and is used only rarely. However, because of the new TP rules, we believe this procedure could gain popularity in settling TP disputes, and that support for this procedure will grow.

In addition, in 2015, Tax Code amendments took effect, allowing taxpayers to switch to 'horizontal' tax monitoring. These changes were made following a successful trial run for this regime by several major Russian companies. Under this regime, taxpayers will regularly provide documents to the tax authorities that confirm the lawfulness of identified tax liabilities or give the tax authorities some access to their corporate IT systems. The regime eliminates the need for field tax audits (save for in exceptional cases) and allows the taxpayer to promptly obtain the tax authorities' reasoned opinion on disputed issues. It is also assumed that the new regime will help reduce the number of tax disputes. Taxpayers can switch to the new regime voluntarily if they meet the following conditions: on the date the taxpayer applies to switch to the new regime, tax accrued in the previous year must have exceeded 300 million roubles; income as per accounting records must have exceeded 3 billion roubles; and assets as per accounting records must exceed 3 billion roubles.

Applications to switch to the new regime must have been submitted by 1 July of the preceding year; in other words, based on the text of the law, it follows that the horizontal tax monitoring regime is applied officially starting from 2016.

Other alternative resolution methods for tax disputes (specifically mediation) are also being discussed, but at this time they are not legally available in Russia.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

The issue of legal and illegal tax optimisation is quite important in Russia. This issue is not regulated legislatively, and for a long time the courts approached the legality or illegality of tax structuring as they saw fit, resulting in inconsistent judicial practice, ambiguity and uncertainty. In late 2006, the Plenum of the SAC adopted Resolution No. 53 on an Assessment by the Arbitrazh Courts of the Justification of Taxpayers Receiving Tax Benefits (Resolution).

The Resolution was designed to identify the key criteria for distinguishing justified from unjustified tax benefits. It specifically stipulates the presumption of good faith on the part of taxpayers. Under the Resolution, a tax benefit can be declared unjustified specifically if it is not related to real economic activity, or if the relevant transactions are not accounted for in accordance with their real economic substance, or transactions were recorded that lack any reasonable economic or other basis (business purpose).

Furthermore, receiving tax benefits is not considered to be an independent business purpose. The Resolution notes that the possibility of achieving the same economic result with a lesser tax benefit, obtained by the taxpayer through entering into other transactions either provided for or not prohibited by law, shall not be grounds for recognising the relevant tax benefit as unjustified. The Resolution lists certain criteria that could indicate an unjustified tax benefit (inability to perform certain transactions, transactions with goods that were not produced, etc.) and a range of criteria that, on their own, do not indicate an unjustified tax benefit (interrelationship of participants, agency arrangements, etc.). Another provision of the Resolution is also important: if the taxpayer did not account for transactions in accordance with their real economic substance, the court should determine the scope of the taxpayer's rights and obligations based on the real economic substance of a relevant transaction; that is, establishing that a tax benefit is unjustified and denying the taxpayer's application for this benefit or cost accounting, etc., is insufficient. It is important to establish the real tax obligation of the taxpayer based on actual relationships.

Generally, this Resolution can be considered as the 'Russian GAAR', and is the only regulation governing this matter.

i Applying the Resolution: an example

In one case,<sup>2</sup> a company had a certain number of employees and paid unified social tax on payments made to its employees. A significant number of these employees were dismissed and subsequently hired by several smaller companies.

The company then entered into outsourcing agreements with these smaller companies. Under these agreements, the smaller companies provided employees to the company, which paid for the services provided by the smaller companies. Furthermore, the smaller companies were subject to a special tax regime and did not pay unified social tax. The tax authorities believed that the employees were transferred for the sole purpose of avoiding unified social tax (i.e., there was no business purpose). The actual relationship between the company and the employees did not change (e.g., the employees worked in the same roles, undertaking the same activities), and the smaller companies were created specifically to save on unified social tax (although formally they were independent).

Based on SAC Presidium Resolution No. 1229/09,<sup>3</sup> the SAC upheld the tax authorities' position. However, the SAC also noted that, when charging additional unified social tax to this company, the authorities should check whether it is entitled to any tax benefits, and to charge additional tax in accordance with the Tax Code taking such benefits into account.

ii Application of the internal Russian thin capitalisation rules: an example

It follows from a literal interpretation of the Tax Code that if a loan is received from a foreign group sister company, the internal Russian thin capitalisation rules are not applicable, and interest can be deducted in full. In the case at hand,<sup>4</sup> a loan was received by a Russian company from a foreign group sister company and the relevant loan interest was fully deducted. However, the tax authorities established that, de facto, the loan was provided by the foreign parent company, while the group sister company was used solely for technical purposes to transfer funds. Accordingly, the tax authorities applied the thin capitalisation rules to the Russian company and charged additional tax. The courts of three instances upheld the position of the tax authorities, and the SAC refused to retry the case. Interestingly, in this case, while neither the tax authority nor the court cited Resolution No. 53 on unjustified tax benefits, they still applied its concepts.

In general practice, if the tax authorities cite unjustified tax benefits (lack of business purpose, real relationship or substance) when charging additional tax, such cases are usually the most complex, and the courts examine the facts of the case and the evidence much more closely.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

Russia has concluded DTTs with many countries. Moreover, some treaties have recently been amended to provide additional regulations, specifically regarding information exchange and assistance in tax collection efforts. The Tax Code directly stipulates that international treaties take precedence over domestic law.

2 Case No. A81-2855/07.

3 Dated 30 June 2009.

4 Case No. A40-1164/11-99-7.

Russia is not a member of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and the latter's comments on applying the Model Treaty are not mandatory or legally binding. Nevertheless, in recent years the courts have started taking these comments into consideration. However, no uniform position on their status and applicability has been developed. In addition, there are no similar domestic comments. The relevant authority for most treaties is MinFin; accordingly, it comments on their applicability.

In recent years, the most interesting treaty-related cases have concerned the application of thin capitalisation rules, identifying the beneficial owner and the creation of a permanent establishment (PE).

By way of example,<sup>5</sup> in a dispute concerning the thin capitalisation rules, a Swiss company held a 20 per cent stake in the charter capital of a Russian company. The Russian company received a loan from the foreign company exceeding its own capital by more than three times. Under domestic Russian thin capitalisation rules, in this situation the total amount of the loan interest cannot be used to calculate profits tax in full. The interest exceeding the maximum must be requalified as a dividend and is subject to the relevant tax. However, the Russian company deducted the loan interest in full. Furthermore, the company proceeded from the fact that Russia's DTT with Switzerland contains a non-discrimination clause. According to the Russian company, this clause allows accounting for loan interest in full, because if the loan were granted by the Russian company the interest would be accounted for in full. Accordingly, the provisions of the domestic Russian thin capitalisation rules contain discriminatory conditions and cannot be applied because they contravene the Russian–Swiss DTT.

For several years, the courts upheld this approach. However, in 2011, the SAC reconsidered the position developed by the lower courts in one such case,<sup>6</sup> indicating that in that case the domestic Russian thin capitalisation rules were applicable, while the non-discrimination clause did not apply. Specifically, the SAC cited OECD comments on the Model Treaty.

Another interesting issue is the identification of beneficial owners to apply DTTs. In one case,<sup>7</sup> a Russian company obtained a loan from its Cypriot parent company, and under the relevant agreement was paying interest on the loan. On the basis of the Russian–Cypriot DTT, tax was not withheld in Russia when the interest was paid. The tax authorities believed that the Cypriot company was not the beneficial owner of the loan interest, as it had itself obtained a similar loan from a company registered in the British Virgin Islands (BVI). Interest from the Russian company was paid to BVI, and in some cases the interest was paid directly by the Russian company to BVI. The first instance and appellate courts upheld the taxpayer's position.<sup>8</sup> They cited the DTT with Cyprus, which does not require the recipient to necessarily have the actual right to the interest (to be the beneficial owner). The tax authorities have decided not to appeal against the courts' decisions further.

6 SAC Presidium Resolution No. 8654/11, 15 November 2011.

8 Ninth Appellate Arbitrazh Court Resolution (appeal instance) No. 9AP-33421/2012-AK dated 5 December 2012.

The tax authorities have also raised the issue of PEs. They closely examine the operations of non-taxable PEs working in Russia regarding their compliance with the definition of a non-taxable PE. Thus, the authorities look closely at whether business activities are preparatory or auxiliary in nature, or both, or constitute the company's core activity. In these disputes, evidence (including witness testimony) is very important.

More disputes involving the tax authorities concerning the application of DTTs are expected in the future.

In addition, significant changes introduced to the Tax Code by the 'de-offshorisation' law should not be overlooked. These changes pertain to three major areas: controlled foreign corporation rules, tax residency rules for legal entities and the concept of beneficial ownership. Relevant disputes are likely to arise in the three-year period following this new legislation, which took effect in 2015.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

The changes ushered in by the de-offshorisation law, which took effect in 2015, are currently the hottest topic in the tax field. While we fully expect to see relevant disputes, they are unlikely to arise before 2018.

Russia's new TP rules, which took effect in 2012, are another hot topic in the taxation field. Although the first audits under the new TP rules started in the summer of 2014, no relevant disputes are likely to reach the courts before 2017. However, the tax authorities are already displaying great interest in these issues, while interest in the pre-2012 TP rules has surged. Taxpayers have won, and continue to win, most disputes under the old rules. The new rules are more complex, and the relevant judicial practice may be different. It is still too early to say how the practice pertaining to these new rules will develop. However, since the rules are rather complex, disputes on these issues will certainly be unavoidable.

Furthermore, during audits the following issues arise most frequently.

i Subject over form

The tax authorities have recently started to focus greater attention on this concept and on relatively new related issues, such as determining the beneficial owner, share deal versus asset deal, transitional payments and back-to-back payments. This trend is likely to continue.

ii Economic justification of expenses

The economic justification of expenses is a mandatory criterion used to account for any costs when calculating profits tax. Since companies' expenses decrease the profits tax base, the tax authorities have tended to pay special attention to this issue, particularly for the following:

- a* a company that is just launching its business activity, and therefore incurs overall losses;
- b* a company that incurs losses as the result of a specific transaction; and
- c* a company whose expenses are suspected of being economically advantageous or beneficial to third parties (other groups, companies, individuals or counterparties) rather than the taxpayer itself.

iii Cross-company charges and cost-sharing agreements

During audits, the tax authorities pay particular attention to the legality of deducting the costs incurred to pay for management and other services provided to group companies. The essential questions raised by the tax authorities are:

- a the real nature of the services provided; the tax authorities check which services were provided and their scope. They ask for the relevant agreement and primary documents (invoices, certificates), as well as for detailed reports on services provided and tangible evidence (communications, presentations, draft documents, marketing materials, etc.);
- b expense redundancy; the tax authorities check whether it was necessary to engage a third party to obtain the disputed services, or whether the company could have obtained the same results on its own. The tax authorities also check whether the company that paid for the services was the same entity that was actually in need of them; and
- c the service fee; the tax authorities check the pricing and its conformity with the scope of services. Accordingly, if the list of services remains the same each year but the service fee increases substantially, there is a high likelihood that the tax authorities will challenge the company's position. If under the old TP rules it was difficult for the tax authorities to confirm the actual market value of such services, the new rules provide more grounds for the tax authorities to verify pricing accuracy.

On such matters, the courts generally uphold the taxpayers' position if the latter provide sufficient evidence that the services were actually rendered and of their relevance to the taxpayers' business. However, recently cases have emerged where the courts have dismissed taxpayers' claims because they could not justify substantial price changes and the scope of services. In future, the tax authorities' interest in this issue will remain high.

iv Accounting for loan interest

The tax authorities pay particular attention to the validity of accounting for loan interest. Most relevant disputes concern domestic thin capitalisation rules (see specific examples in Sections VIII and IX, supra), interest-free loans and the calculation of arm's-length interest.

v Bad-faith suppliers

In the normal course of business, companies interact with numerous suppliers and face the risk of dealing with a 'bad-faith supplier'. This could lead to increased taxes for the buyer, although the impact may vary depending upon the tax authorities' claims. Under the best-case scenario, the buyer would have to settle the dispute with the tax authorities. Under the worst-case scenario, the buyer would have to pay additionally charged taxes, late payment interest and fines should the tax authorities judge the supplier, or relationships with the supplier, as non-existent or artificial.

As a result, ensuring the 'good faith' of a supplier before entering into any commercial relationships is of particular importance for a company. The main indicators of a supplier's bad faith are failure to pay taxes, failure to submit tax returns and the lack of any capital assets or employees.

Even though in most cases the arbitrazh courts have tended to favour taxpayers, there may be situations in which it is difficult to defend the taxpayer's position.

vi Beneficial ownership

The tax authorities have recently started to pay particular attention to determining the beneficial owners of passive income from Russia. This heightened interest on the part of the tax authorities may be the result of the latest confirmation of their right to collect withholding income tax from tax agents, which are also Russian legal entities.<sup>9</sup>

When applying reduced rates of withholding tax (as determined by a DTT), a taxpayer must be sure that the recipient of the income is their beneficial owner.

If the taxpayer fails to prove this, then it will be charged with additional assessed tax, a fine and penalties. Recent court practice has shown that companies are often unable to confirm beneficial ownership of income.<sup>10</sup> This trend will likely continue.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Generally, there are two main trends regarding tax disputes in Russia. The first is the growing complexity of tax disputes, in which the tax authorities are raising increasingly complicated issues (e.g., beneficial ownership, thin capitalisation, TP). During audits, the tax authorities are questioning witnesses and performing expert examinations more frequently, and information exchange with foreign jurisdictions is improving. In this context, it is harder for taxpayers to win a dispute on one hand, while on the other, the general number of cases has fallen substantially as there are fewer standard, straightforward cases.

The second trend concerns the shift of disputes away from litigation to the pre-litigation stage. Administrative procedures for adjudicating disputes are becoming more efficient. Interest in alternative resolution methods for tax disputes (advance pricing agreements, MAP, horizontal monitoring) is also growing. This trend is extremely beneficial for taxpayers, and will continue in future. However, certain efforts must be made towards this end, including legislative amendments. Currently, litigation remains the most effective avenue for resolving a tax dispute.

SINGAPORE

I INTRODUCTION

Tax disputes in Singapore are generally resolved in a non-contentious manner, as the Inland Revenue Authority of Singapore (IRAS)<sup>2</sup> tends to be amenable to engaging in discussions with taxpayers to reach a compromised outcome favourable to both sides first. Before taxpayers may initiate discussions with IRAS, they are expected to have provided all relevant information and even legal submissions to IRAS for its consideration. It is therefore paramount for taxpayers to maintain a proper and complete set of contemporaneous records of their business activities in support of their stance on the issues in dispute.

On the few occasions where discussions fail to yield a compromised outcome, taxpayers may choose to litigate the tax dispute as a last resort. Tax litigation in Singapore is relatively uncomplicated, with the relevant procedures and timelines to be complied clearly set out in the tax legislations.<sup>3</sup> Nevertheless, a taxpayer who opts to litigate a tax dispute must be prepared to expend considerable time, effort and costs. As such, a taxpayer would generally litigate a tax dispute only if it was financially justifiable.

The number of tax disputes before the tribunals and the courts on a year-to-year basis remains constantly low. Between 2012 and 2016, the tax disputes litigated before the tribunals and courts primarily concerned issues relating to whether gains arising from the sale of property or shares are considered capital or revenue in nature, deductibility of certain expenses and the exchange of information.<sup>4</sup> Of keen interest among the litigated cases during this period was Singapore's first income tax avoidance case.<sup>5</sup> After the Singapore courts provided clarity on the application of Singapore's general anti-avoidance rule provision in that case, IRAS appears to have little appetite to litigate cases that would test the boundaries of acceptable and illegitimate tax avoidance. This is, however, not surprising, as IRAS is generally conservative and risk-averse, preferring to take on taxpayers only in tax disputes where revenue exposure is significant, where it is necessary to defend its longstanding practice or where there is more than a reasonable chance of success before the tribunals and courts.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

i Income tax

Disputes relating to income tax commonly arise with the filing of tax returns. Upon the delivery of the tax returns,<sup>6</sup> IRAS will conduct a review and may make an enquiry regarding anything that is stated (or that ought to be stated) in the tax returns and accompanying documents, such as financial statements and tax computations that may affect the tax liability of the taxpayer or another person in that year of assessment<sup>7</sup> or another year of assessment. Enquiries are made by way of letters sent to the taxpayer or his or her tax agent, and may shed light as to the potential issues in dispute. While there is no specific time frame set to complete the review, IRAS will usually treat the review as completed progressively as and when the issues are resolved. In exceptional circumstances where IRAS receives information affecting the tax liability of the taxpayer from other internal or external sources, it may conduct a further review. Such review is, however, subject to the time limits imposed on the Comptroller of Income Tax to make assessments.<sup>8</sup>

On completion of the review, IRAS would make an assessment and issue a notice of assessment to the taxpayer informing him or her of any tax payable by him or her, or refund due to him or her; and the place at which the tax can be paid, his or her rights of objection to the assessment, and his or her obligation to inform IRAS of any errors in the notice if he or she is exempted from liability to furnish a tax return.<sup>9</sup> If the taxpayer does not agree with the assessment as reflected in the notice of assessment, he or she would have to file a written notice of objection stating the precise grounds of objection within 30 days from the date of service of the notice of assessment.<sup>10</sup> For corporate taxpayers, IRAS has extended the deadline to file the notice of objections to two months from the date of service of the notice of assessment by way of an administrative concession.<sup>11</sup> In the event that the objection is late without reasonable cause or is invalid, IRAS is not obliged to accept the objection,<sup>12</sup>

5 See Section VIII, infra.

6 For corporations, tax returns refer to Form C-S or Form C.

7 Year of assessment refers to the year in which income tax is computed and charged. Each year of assessment begins on 1 January and ends on 31 December.

8 Under Section 74(1) of the Income Tax Act, the statutory time limit for the Comptroller of Income Tax to raise an assessment or additional assessment for any year of assessment is five years. The statutory time limit, however, does not apply in cases of fraud.

and the assessment (as shown in the notice of assessment) is deemed final and conclusive.<sup>13</sup> Notwithstanding that a notice of objection has been filed, the taxpayer is required to pay the tax assessed within one month after the date of service of the notice of assessment.<sup>14</sup>

Once an objection to an assessment has been filed, IRAS may request further information (such as books of accounts and documents) and legal submissions from the taxpayer. The taxpayer may also initiate meetings with IRAS to provide the necessary clarifications. Although there is no prescribed time limit by which IRAS must make a decision, IRAS as a matter of practice will generally complete the review within six months from the date of the taxpayer's last correspondence and receipt of completed information, and convey its decision to the taxpayer.<sup>15</sup> If the taxpayer and IRAS are unable to reach an agreement on the tax dispute, or information has not been forthcoming from the taxpayer two years after the objection was filed, IRAS shall give the taxpayer the notice of refusal to amend<sup>16</sup> the assessment so that he or she may proceed to appeal to the Income Tax Board of Review.<sup>17</sup>

ii GST

As GST is a self-assessed tax, the taxable person (i.e., a person registered for GST) is required to file the GST return in respect of the goods and services made by him or her and make payment of GST within one month after the end of the prescribed accounting period.<sup>18</sup> Where IRAS disagrees with the content of the GST return (or where a GST return has not been timely filed), IRAS may to the best of its judgement make an assessment and notify the taxpayer of it. Penalties are statutorily imposed where incorrect GST returns are submitted or GST returns are not timely filed.<sup>19</sup> In practice, IRAS will usually notify the taxpayer of its concerns and provide him or her with an opportunity to address those concerns before issuing the assessments.

Any person who is aggrieved by an assessment or by any decision made by IRAS with respect to certain matters, such as the registration or cancellation of registration and the decision to treat persons as 'a single taxable person', may apply to IRAS for review and revision by filing a written notice of objection stating the precise grounds of objection within 30 days of the date that person has been notified of the decision.<sup>20</sup>

Once an objection has been filed, IRAS is obliged to conduct a review,<sup>21</sup> and may request further information and legal submissions from the taxpayer. The taxpayer may also initiate meetings with IRAS to provide the necessary clarifications. IRAS will within

iii Stamp duties

For stamp duties, any person who is dissatisfied with an assessment made by IRAS under any provisions of the Stamp Duties Act may apply to IRAS for review of the assessment by filing a written notice of objection stating the grounds of objection within 30 days after the date of assessment.<sup>24</sup> When an objection has been filed, the taxpayer is obliged to furnish further particulars and information in relation to the grounds of the objection if required to do so by IRAS in writing.<sup>25</sup> The taxpayer may also furnish legal submissions and initiate meetings with IRAS to provide the necessary clarifications. Notwithstanding that an objection has been filed, the taxpayer is required to pay the duty assessed.<sup>26</sup> As soon as practical after the objection is determined, IRAS will inform the taxpayer in writing of the decision and the reasons for the decision.<sup>27</sup> If the taxpayer is dissatisfied with the decision of IRAS, he or she may lodge an appeal against the assessment to the High Court.<sup>28</sup>

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Income Tax Board of Review (ITBR)

The ITBR is specifically constituted under the Income Tax Act<sup>29</sup> to adjudicate appeals relating to income tax and consists of not more than 30 individual members appointed by the Minister for Finance. The quorum for hearing an appeal is usually three members, one of whom will be the Chairman or Deputy Chairman,<sup>30</sup> and the ITBR decides by a majority of votes.<sup>31</sup>

The ITBR generally has powers of a district court, such as the power to summon persons to give evidence and produce documents relevant to the appeal, and the power to award costs.<sup>32</sup> Hearings before the ITBR are in camera (i.e., closed to the public).<sup>33</sup> The ITBR may also at any time refer a case to the High Court for its opinion on a question of law.

32 Section 80(5) of the Income Tax Act.

33 Section 83(1) of the Income Tax Act.

Appeals from decisions of the ITBR are to the High Court, and appeal is only available if the issue in dispute is a question of law or of mixed law and fact, and the disputed tax exceeds S$200.<sup>34</sup> Any decision of the ITBR on a finding of fact is final, and there can be no appeal to the High Court.

ii Goods and Services Tax Board of Review (GSTBR)

The GSTBR is specifically constituted under the GST Act<sup>35</sup> to adjudicate appeals relating to GST and consists of not more than 50 individual members appointed by the Minister of Finance. As the GSTBR decides by a majority of votes,<sup>36</sup> the quorum for hearing an appeal is usually three members, one of whom will be the Chairman or Deputy Chairman.<sup>37</sup> The GSTBR has similar powers to the ITBR, and hearings before the GSTBR are in camera.<sup>38</sup> The GSTBR will not hear an appeal unless the taxpayer has submitted all returns, and all amounts shown in those returns as payable are paid or deposited with IRAS.<sup>39</sup>

Appeals from decisions of the GSTBR are to the High Court. There is no unfettered right of appeal to the High Court as an appeal against the GSTBR's decision may only be lodged if the issue in dispute is a question of law or of mixed law and fact, and the disputed tax exceeds S$500.<sup>40</sup> Hence, there can be no appeal to the High Court on any decision of the GSTBR on a finding of fact.

iii High Court and Court of Appeal

Appeals to the High Court from the ITBR and GSTBR are to comply with the procedures set out in Order 55 of the Rules of Court. An appeal under Order 55 is by way of a rehearing.<sup>41</sup> High Court cases are heard by a single judge in camera.<sup>42</sup> The High Court after hearing the case may confirm, reduce, increase or annul the assessment as determined by the ITBR,<sup>43</sup> or confirm, vary or annul the decision of the GSTBR, and make such further or other orders on costs or otherwise as it thinks fit.<sup>44</sup>

To appeal against the stamp duty assessment to the High Court, the taxpayer would require IRAS to state and sign a case setting forth the question upon which IRAS's opinion was required and the decision made by its. In addition, the taxpayer is required to pay the stamp duty assessed.<sup>45</sup> The procedures for filing an appeal are set out in Order 55A of the Rules of Court.

Appeals from the High Court are to the Court of Appeal,<sup>46</sup> (the final appellant court) where three judges who have the same powers as the High Court will usually sit to hear the appeal. The procedures to appeal to the Court of Appeal are set out in Order 57 of the Rules of Court, and the appeal is by way of a rehearing. Appeals from the High Court to the Court of Appeal for income tax and GST cases are heard in camera.<sup>47</sup>

While the taxpayer him or herself, or his or her representative (usually an accountant or a lawyer), may conduct the hearings before the tribunals, he or she would, however, have to be legally represented for the hearings before the High Court and the subsequent appeal to the Court of Appeal unless he or she wishes to conduct the hearing in person.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

i Penalties

Singapore's tax legislation provides for varying penalties, fines and even periods of imprisonment for different type of offences committed by taxpayer. The penalty a taxpayer may be liable for would vary with the severity of the offence committed.

For general income tax offences (where no penalties are specifically provided for), such as failure to comply with IRAS's notice to provide information, the penalty imposed is a fine.<sup>48</sup> Strict liability income offences,<sup>49</sup> such as failure to give notice of chargeability,<sup>50</sup> to file a return<sup>51</sup> or to pay tax,<sup>52</sup> attract immediate penalties, and in default, incremental additional penalties for each day the notice is not given, the return is not filed or tax is not paid.

As for non-strict liability income tax offences such as filing of incorrect returns where the errors arose out of 'ignorance or negligence' or 'deliberately', the penalties imposed are on a sliding scale varying with the degree of culpability and quantified as a percentage of the tax undercharged. Penalties range from 200 per cent of the tax undercharged for ignorant and negligent errors<sup>53</sup> up to 400 per cent of the tax undercharged for deliberate and concealed errors,<sup>54</sup> and may include a fine and imprisonment on conviction.

A similar penalty regime applies to GST offences. As GST is a self-assessed tax, the penalties tend to be heftier. For example, the penalty imposed for failure to keep business records is a fine of S$5,000 or imprisonment on conviction.<sup>55</sup> Penalties are also imposed for improperly obtaining a refund,<sup>56</sup> and for collecting or attempting to collect tax without authorisation.<sup>57</sup> For stamp duty, failure to stamp an instrument with the requisite duty would result in the instrument being inadmissible in evidence in a civil court.<sup>58</sup> Penalties of up to four times the deficient duty payable may be imposed for unstamped documents or documents with insufficient stamp duties paid.

ii Voluntary disclosure programme (VDP)

Penalties for the various tax offences can be reduced if a taxpayer makes a voluntary disclosure of the errors in their tax matters under IRAS's VDP. To qualify for a waiver of penalties or a reduced penalty under the VDP, the taxpayer must make a timely and self-initiated voluntary disclosure,<sup>59</sup> and submit a complete and accurate VDP application.<sup>60</sup> In addition, the taxpayer must fully cooperate with IRAS to rectify errors, and pay or make arrangement to pay the shortfall in taxes and penalties imposed (if any). No penalty will be imposed for errors disclosed within one year from the statutory filing deadline. For disclosures made outside the grace period and disclosures of errors relating to stamp duty, a flat penalty of 5 per cent of the tax (or duty) payable will be imposed.<sup>61</sup>

i Recovering overpaid tax

A taxpayer who overpaid tax (or duty) and a penalty may generally submit a claim within a certain time to IRAS requiring it to refund the excess tax (or duty) and penalty paid. In practice, taxpayers rarely have to make a claim, as most tax refunds are given automatically. Tax credits are usually refunded by IRAS within 30 days of arising.

IRAS is not, however, obliged to make a refund (in whole or in part), particularly if it would:

- a* involve reopening assessments that are final and conclusive;
- b* result in allowing an objection that was filed out-of-time or was invalid;
- c* the tax and penalties were not received; or
- d* the refund would unjustly enrich the taxpayer.<sup>62</sup>

59 A voluntary disclosure is considered timely and self-initiated if the disclosure was made before a taxpayer receives a query from IRAS; or the disclosure was made before the taxpayer receives notification from IRAS of the commencement of an audit or investigation.

60 See Annex F of IRAS e-Tax Guide 'IRAS' Voluntary Disclosure Programme' (6th Edition).

61 See IRAS e-Tax Guide 'IRAS' Voluntary Disclosure Programme' (6th Edition) for more details.

62 Sections 93 of the Income Tax Act, Section 90 of the GST Act and Section 75 of the Stamp Duties Act.

Where IRAS has given notification of its intent to appeal against the decision of the ITBR, it may withhold the repayment until determination of the appeal, but it would have to pay interest at a rate of 5 per cent per annum to the taxpayer from the date of the appeal.<sup>63</sup>

ii Error and mistake relief

Under the Income Tax Act, a taxpayer who overpaid tax may at any time within four years after the end of the year of assessment within which the assessment was made claim relief in respect of any error or mistake made in his tax or her return or statement made by him or her, or, where the taxpayer is exempted from making a return, in the relevant notice of assessment.<sup>64</sup> The phrase 'error or mistake' is not statutorily defined, but it would cover genuine arithmetical errors, omissions and even mistakes of law.<sup>65</sup> The relief, however, would not apply if the return or statement was computed on the basis of or in accordance with the prevailing practice of IRAS at the time the return or statement was made.<sup>66</sup>

Upon receiving the taxpayer's claim for relief, IRAS is bound to inquire into it and give, by way of repayment of tax or amendment to the assessment, such relief as it appears to be reasonable and just.<sup>67</sup> In deciding whether to accept the claim for relief, IRAS is entitled to have regard to all relevant circumstances of the case, and in particular whether the grant of relief would result in the exclusion from charge to tax of income of the taxpayer for other years.<sup>68</sup> In the event that IRAS refuses the claim for relief, the taxpayer may appeal against its decision to the ITBR.<sup>69</sup>

While judicial review is another avenue to challenge decisions of IRAS or the tax tribunals, it may only be invoked only when all other available avenues have been exhausted. Judicial review focuses on the process and the scope of the decision rather than the merits of the decision taken. Generally, judicial review would apply to decisions that suffer procedural impropriety,<sup>70</sup> or that are irrational or illegal. To file an application for judicial review, the taxpayer would first have to obtain leave from the High Court. Remedies available for judicial review are a declaration (either on a point of law, or that a decision is invalid or void), a prohibiting order,<sup>71</sup> a quashing order<sup>72</sup> and a mandatory order.<sup>73</sup>

71 An order to restrain the public authority from doing something.

72 An order to quash a decision or action of the public authority.

73 An order to compel the public authority to perform its public duties or functions.

VI COSTS

The award of costs by the tax tribunals and courts is entirely discretionary, whether in principle or in quantum.<sup>74</sup> Commonly, the tax tribunals and courts will award as per 'costs follow the event', in that the costs of action are usually borne by the losing party with the quantum to be agreed between the parties, and taxed<sup>75</sup> if no agreement is reached.

In circumstances where IRAS is awarded costs of an appeal by the tax tribunals, it may also be awarded all reasonable costs of the appeal, including a fee for any counsel or legal officer appearing on its behalf, and the cost is to be recoverable together with the taxes.<sup>76</sup> For appeals considered to be frivolous or vexatious, the tax tribunals may award additional costs to IRAS.<sup>77</sup>

There are currently no alternative methods for resolving tax disputes. Taxpayers who do not want to be embroiled in tax disputes may apply, for a fee, to IRAS for an advance ruling (or adjudication) on the tax treatment to be applied to a proposed or specific transaction or arrangement based on an interpretation of the current tax legislation.<sup>78</sup> The ruling is private and confidential to the taxpayer, and is not published by IRAS. Further, the ruling is legally binding, and IRAS is bound to apply the law in the manner set out in the ruling once it is issued. The ruling issued by IRAS is also final, and cannot be subjected to the appeal process.

Although the ruling is final and binding on IRAS, the taxpayer is not obliged to follow the ruling, and he or she may prepare his or her return as he or she deems appropriate. However, the taxpayer must disclose in his or her tax return whether he or she had previously sought an advance ruling, and if so, whether he or she had relied on the ruling. If IRAS subsequently issues a tax assessment based on the ruling disagreed by the parties, the taxpayer may object and appeal to the tax tribunals (or the High Court).<sup>79</sup>

Singapore had enacted the general anti-avoidance rule (GAAR) provisions for the various tax types in the respective governing tax legislation.<sup>80</sup> The GAAR provisions specifically target arrangements<sup>81</sup> that have the purpose or effect of giving rise to a relevant tax advantage. The GAAR provisions in the GST Act and Stamp Duties Act mirror Section 33 of the Income Tax Act, which was introduced in 1988. As the GAAR provisions are broadly worded, the Court of Appeal has, in the first tax income tax avoidance case (AQQ),<sup>82</sup> provided the much-needed clarification on their application.

In considering whether the GAAR would apply to an arrangement, the courts would apply the following steps:

- a* to consider whether the taxpayer had derived a tax advantage from an arrangement that falls within the limbs set out in the GAAR;<sup>83</sup>
- b* if the arrangement has the effect of tax avoidance, to consider whether the arrangement falls within the statutory exception (i.e., the arrangement is carried out for bona fide commercial reasons, and has not, as one of its main purposes, the avoidance or reduction of tax);<sup>84</sup>
- c* if the statutory exception does not apply, to consider whether the taxpayer has satisfied the courts that the tax advantage arose from the use of a specific provision in the tax statute that was within the intended scope and Parliament's contemplation and purpose in terms of both legal form and economic reality in the context of the arrangement as a whole.<sup>85</sup>

In the event that the taxpayer is not able to satisfy the courts, the GAAR would apply and IRAS may exercise its discretion to counteract the tax advantage to disregard or vary the arrangement and make such adjustments as it considers appropriate.<sup>86</sup> Where there is more than one method available to counteract the tax advantage, the courts generally would not intervene with IRAS's choice of method as long as IRAS has exercised its power fairly and reasonably, and that that method achieves the object of negating the tax advantage.<sup>87</sup>

As tax assessments are generally issued for GAAR cases, appeals against IRAS decisions to apply the GAAR would follow the usual appeal procedure. In the unlikely case that a tax assessment is not issued, the taxpayer would have to apply for judicial review to challenge

IRAS. Unlike the usual cases where the burden of proof lies with the taxpayer,<sup>88</sup> IRAS bears the burden of proving that there was a tax avoidance arrangement, and that the counteraction method adopted was fair and reasonable.

Following AQQ, the IRAS issued the e-tax guide on GAAR,<sup>89</sup> stating that it would apply GAAR as per the guidance provided by the Court of Appeal. In addition, IRAS has stated that it would apply GAAR if the arrangement had any of the following certain features:

- a* circular flow or round-tripping of funds;
- b* setting up of more than one entity for the sole purpose of obtaining a tax advantage;
- c* change in business form for the sole purpose of obtaining a tax advantage; and
- d* attribution of income that is not aligned with economic reality.

While the e-tax guide sheds light on IRAS' internal policy on GAAR, it must be emphasised that the e-tax guide is not law.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

Recent cases concerning exchange of information arose from Singapore's obligation to furnish information to another competent authority under the double taxation treaties and the application of domestic tax legislation. Prior to 28 November 2014, IRAS was required to apply to the High Court for an order to obtain information protected under banking secrecy laws<sup>90</sup> or trust company secrecy laws<sup>91</sup> before the information was disclosed to the competent authority under the double taxation treaty.

The requirement to apply for a High Court order has since been removed as part of Singapore's ongoing commitment towards international cooperation against cross-border tax offences, including the application of a new internationally agreed exchange of information standard to all its existing treaty partners without the need to renegotiate the individual double taxation treaty on a reciprocity basis.

To challenge IRAS' request for information, a taxpayer may apply for judicial review. Judicial review is the only avenue available for taxpayers wishing to challenge IRAS' request for information even after Singapore implements the common reporting standards<sup>92</sup> in 2018.

88 The taxpayer usually bears the burden of proving that the tax assessment made by IRAS is excessive.

92 Singapore implemented common reporting standards with effect from 1 January 2017. Under the regime, Singapore automatically exchanges information with jurisdictions that it had signed competent authority agreements with. Singapore will automatically exchange information from 2018 onwards with Australia, Canada, Finland, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Korea, Latvia, Malta, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, South Africa and the United Kingdom. ## X AREAS OF FOCUS

As IRAS takes the view that maximising the level of voluntary compliance is the only sustainable means to ensure tax administration remains effective and efficient in the long run, IRAS continues to place a lot of emphasis on taxpayer's compliance and VDP. For 2016, IRAS has indicated that it would be focusing on the compliance of taxpayers dealing with wholesale chemical and chemical products, and travel agencies and ticketing agents.<sup>93</sup> This is in addition to its ongoing focus on taxpayers who, inter alia:

- a* fail to file their tax returns;
- b* claim productivity and innovation credits;<sup>94</sup>
- c* claim for group relief;
- d* claim for tax exemptions for foreign-sourced dividends;<sup>95</sup> or
- e* receive different streams of income taxable at different rates.<sup>96</sup>

Taxpayers who fall under the above categories can therefore expect to be audited and subjected to enquiries.

While the AQQ case in respect of the application of the GAAR has been concluded, the case itself is still far from being concluded. Even though IRAS won the battle in asserting that the GAAR applied to the arrangement undertaken, the taxpayer won the war, as it was not required to return the refunds it had received from IRAS due to a strict reading of a provision concerning IRAS' power to raise an additional assessment. IRAS has commenced an action in the High Court to recover the tax refunds, and the outcome will be of keen interest to IRAS and tax practitioners, as the courts may need to address the interaction between restitution (and perhaps even equity) and tax. Should IRAS succeed, restitution (and perhaps even equity) is arguably an alternative available to taxpayers to recover overpaid taxes or obtain refunds.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Since the release of the base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS)<sup>97</sup> 2015 Final Report by the OECD<sup>98</sup> (Final Report), Singapore announced on 16 June 2016 that it would join the inclusive framework for global implementation of measures against BEPS (BEPS Project). Singapore had also committed to implementing four minimum standards under the BEPS

94 An incentive that allows businesses that invest in certain qualifying activities to enjoy tax savings in the form of deductions or allowances of up to 400 per cent, or to opt for non-taxable cash out. See IRAS e-Tax Guide 'Productivity and Innovation Credit' (Fourth Edition) for details.

95 See IRAS e-Tax Guide 'Tax Exemption for Foreign Sourced Income' (2nd Edition) for details.

96 At the time of writing, IRAS had not announced its area of focus on compliance for GST.

97 BEPS refers to tax-planning strategies that take advantage of gaps and mismatches in tax rules to artificially profit from low or no-tax jurisdictions where there is little or no economic activity, resulting in little or no tax being paid.

98 5 October 2015.

Project, in particular the standards to countering harmful tax practices, preventing treaty abuse, transfer pricing documentation and enhancing dispute resolutions. In keeping with this commitment, Singapore has implemented country-by-country reporting (CbCR) for multinational enterprises whose ultimate parent entities are in Singapore, and whose group turnover exceed S$1.125 million for financial years beginning on or after 1 January 2017. These enterprises are required to file reports with IRAS within 12 months from the last day of their financial year, and the CbCR information would be shared with countries that Singapore had entered bilateral agreements with for the exchange of CbCR information.<sup>99</sup>

As information exchange between Singapore and its treaty partners will be conducted only from 2018, taxpayers are encouraged to identify and manage their tax risks and potential tax exposures as soon as practical possible and, if necessary, to take advantage of any ongoing voluntary tax disclosure programmes. Taxpayers who fail to do so would subsequently find it difficult to block the exchange of information through judicial review, as they would not be familiar with IRAS' internal process for handling exchange of information with other competent authorities. In addition to the above, taxpayers should continue to review their existing corporate structures and tax planning strategies in anticipation that Singapore may adopt any of the remaining action plans in the Final Report.

Like 2015, 2016 was a lacklustre year in the fields of direct and indirect taxes in terms of tax litigation, and this trend looks set to continue in 2017. In view of the fast-paced developments in the international sphere, there is still time in 2017 for taxpayers to review their tax compliance and tax planning strategies before further international tax policies are adopted into domestic law and practice. Taxpayers who miss this opportunity may subsequently find themselves in a position of 'too little, too late' come 2018.

SPAIN

Miró Ayats Vergés and Jaume Bonet León<sup>1</sup>

I INTRODUCTION

The amount of tax litigation in Spain is too high, as evidenced in the Spanish Tax Agency's report published in 2013. According to the report, over 619,000 appeals were resolved in 2012. As for the number of appeals upheld, figures vary depending on the stage of proceedings, but successful claims range between 20 and 40 per cent of the total number of appeals settled. The reason for this high rate of litigiousness lies in two main factors:

- a* The diversity and complexity of tax laws, as well as the constant amendments they are subject to. For example, the state tax regulations alone are made up of almost 4,000 articles, not including EU law and the regulations enacted by the Spanish autonomous regions and municipalities.
- b* The fact that tax management is based on self-assessed tax returns means that the taxpayer must periodically assume the obligation to declare the chargeable event, be knowledgeable of all tax regulations, apply them correctly in each case, and calculate and pay the tax debt. The tax authorities only act afterwards, either through an inspection proceeding aimed at detecting mistakes in a taxpayer's actions and, where appropriate, imposing penalties, or through the executive collection proceeding aimed at collecting due amounts that have not been voluntarily paid within the given deadline.

i Allocation of tax competences in Spain

In any case, taxpayers may appeal before the courts of justice against acts or decisions of the tax authorities that they consider erroneous. These appeals must always be made in writing. The procedural channels taxpayers may use depend on which tax authority issued the disputed act.

In Spain, tax competences are found at three levels:

- a* Local authorities, which are basically local councils. Although municipalities have their own finance offices, their authority to impose taxes is limited. They can levy taxes on public services (such as planning permission and opening licences), apply special levies on public building works, and apply taxes such as property tax, business tax, tax on construction, installation and building works, tax on an increase in the value of urban property and tax on motor vehicles.
- b* Autonomous region authorities, which manage two types of tax: transferred state taxes (basically wealth tax, tax on inheritance and donations, and capital transfer tax and stamp duty) and the autonomous regions' own taxes, which they can establish within the limits laid down by law (such as taxes to protect the environment, levies on fuel consumption and gambling tax).
- c* General state authorities, which impose the main taxes: personal income tax, non-resident income tax, corporation tax, value added tax (VAT) and special taxes levied on the consumption of specific products.

ii General features of the tax litigation system

A main feature of the Spanish tax litigation system is the need to exhaust all administrative review proceedings to challenge tax decisions before the courts. There are three levels: the administrative stage, where an appeal can be filed before the body that issued the controversial act; the judicial review stage, to which access may be gained by filing an economic-administrative claim before the economic and administrative tribunals, either directly against the challenged act or against the decision rejecting a prior appeal at the administrative level; and the judicial stage, to which taxpayers can only gain access if their appeals have been rejected in the previous stages.

Filing an appeal does not suspend the obligation to pay the tax requested by the authorities. To avoid payment, as well as the generation of surcharges (ranging from 5 to 20 per cent), it is necessary to request the suspension of the enforceability of the debt, providing a bank guarantee covering the whole debt plus interest and surcharges that may eventually be assessed. Exceptionally, it is possible to provide another type of guarantee considered adequate, and even to obtain the suspension with partial exemption from guarantees. There is no need to secure a debt deriving from a sanction. Total exemption is sometimes granted if the tax authorities consider that the challenged act presents a mathematic, material or factual error.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Appeals concerning local taxes

Acts concerning local taxes issued by municipalities must be necessarily challenged before the body that issued them by filing an administrative appeal, and if that body completely or partially dismisses the taxpayer's claims, the claimant must seek recourse before the judiciary. Only in the case of large municipalities are taxpayers entitled to appeal before the economic-administrative tribunals.

The administrative appeal must be filed within one month from the day following notification of this act. The appeal must be submitted in writing, and the document must contain the allegations on which the appellant backs its claim. The taxpayer may prepare and file the appeal.

This appeal must be resolved within one month. Otherwise, the taxpayer can wait for an express decision or deem it rejected and resort to the next instance (in the case of negative administrative silence). In the case of taxes of large municipalities, this appeal is optional, and an economic-administrative appeal can be filed before the relevant economic-administrative body. In some large municipalities, it is also possible to file an appeal with a specific local body.

If the appeal is totally or partially refused, it is only possible to seek a judicial review by filing an appeal with the contentious-administrative court of the capital city of the province. If the amount of the claim exceeds €30,000, the ruling issued by the court can be appealed within 15 days before the high court of justice of the autonomous region. The ruling issued by the latter can be appealed before the Supreme Court if there is cassational interest. If the amount of the claim is equal to or less than €30,000, it would be theoretically possible to file a cassation appeal before the Supreme Court, but there are some requirements that, in practice, can only be met by the administration and not by taxpayers.

ii Appeals concerning state taxes

Administrative appeals

Filing a claim at the administrative level is optional. This means that taxpayers can choose between filing an appeal before the authority that issued the act and filing an economic-administrative claim directly before the economic-administrative tribunals, also called tax courts for the purposes of this chapter. The procedure is the same as the one described above for administrative appeals concerning local taxes.

In practice, these appeals are only upheld in cases of evident error of fact or law. If the appeal is totally or partially refused, the taxpayer can file an economic-administrative appeal before the tax court.

Economic-administrative appeals

Despite their name, economic-administrative tribunals are not judicial bodies, but special administrative bodies with functional independence, integrated within the Ministry of Finance and Public Administration.

The deadline for lodging an economic-administrative claim with these tribunals – whether it is against a decision issued at the administrative level, or directly against a tax act – is one month from the day following notification of the decision or act.

Appeals relating to acts issued by the central bodies of the Ministry of Finance and the Public Administration or other ministerial departments, bodies of the Spanish Tax Agency and bodies of public law entities related to or subject to the General State Administration, or of superior bodies of the administration of the autonomous regions, must be filed with the Central Economic-Administrative Tribunal (TEAC). Appeals relating to acts issued by the peripheral bodies of the General State Administration, the Spanish Tax Agency and bodies of public law entities related to or subject to the General State Administration, or by bodies of the autonomous regions that are not superior, must generally be lodged with the Regional Economic-Administrative Tribunal (TEAR). However, if the amount of the claim exceeds €150,000, or €1.8 million if it is a claim against base amounts or assessments, the claim can be filed with the TEAC.

Claims filed with the TEAR are processed through the ordinary procedure if the amount of the claim exceeds €6,000, or €72,000 in the case of claims against base amounts or assessments. If the amount is equal or less to this amount, claims are processed through an abridged proceeding.

The claim application must be filed with the body that handed down the tax decision, which will send it to the relevant court. In an ordinary proceeding, the application can only state the will to challenge the decision, and also contain the claimant's allegations and evidence. After a period of up to several months, the court will grant the claimant one month to examine the file, request – if appropriate – that it be complemented, and file any allegations that were not made in the application, make additional ones and provide any evidence the claimant deems relevant. In the abridged proceeding, the claim application must include the suggested allegations and evidence.

The recent amendment to the General Tax Act (Act 58/2003 of 17 December) by Act 34/2015 of 21 September aims to promote the greater and better use of electronic means in all procedural stages. Thus, economic-administrative claims, allegations and evidence must be filed electronically when a claimant is obliged to receive the tax authorities' communications and notifications through electronic means (most importantly, public limited companies and private limited companies). In these cases, notifications concerning a procedure must be made in the same way once this provision has been established under a regulation. Claim files will also be displayed for examination in the same way. In other cases, the use of electronic means is optional for claimants (for instance, individuals).

During economic-administrative proceedings, the enforceability of the challenged acts can be suspended if so requested, under the terms described in Section II.ii, infra.

Under the General Tax Act (Act 58/2003 of 17 December), the court's resolution must be issued within six months in the case of abridged proceedings, and one year in the case of ordinary proceedings. In practice, however, 24 months might elapse before the court resolves the case.

If the resolution rejects the claim, the claimant can file a contentious-administrative appeal with a court of justice within two months. If the amount of the claim is greater than €150,000 (or €1.8 million if it concerns claims against base amounts or assessments), the claimant may previously file an appeal with the TEAC within one month from the day following notification of the resolution.

In any case, the TEAC's resolutions, whether issued at single instance or second instance, may be appealed before the National Court.

The recent amendment to the General Tax Act will make it possible to refer a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice of the European Union within economic-administrative proceedings, although this provision has not been developed yet. If the Court decides of its own volition to refer the matter, it will grant the parties a 15-day term to submit their allegations on its admissibility. The filing of the preliminary ruling will entail the suspension of the proceeding until it is resolved. It will also suspend the prescription period of the right to assess and demand payment of the tax debt.

Appeals with the courts of justice

Contentious-administrative appeal

Contentious-administrative appeals must be lodged with the National Court or the high court of justice within two months from the day following notification of the resolution.

The proceeding begins with a written application filed with the relevant court asking the court to deem and declare that the proceeding has started. Once this has been done, the court will ask the defendant administration to send the administrative file. After the file has been received, the court will decide whether the appeal is admissible. If the appeal is admitted, it will be disclosed to the appellant, who can then submit the claim and, if appropriate, request evidence to be presented within 20 days. The state attorney will also be notified. Once the claim has been filed, it is sent to the defendants for them to reply and request, where appropriate, evidence to be presented within another 20 days.

As in the economic-administrative stage, it is possible to request the suspension of the challenged decision. If suspension was granted during the previous stage, the court may accept the same guarantees provided previously if the appellant provides evidence of their existence and the extent of their effects on the judicial instances.

After evidence has been produced, where relevant, the parties must present their conclusions about the facts, the evidence and the legal grounds on which they back their appeals in consecutive 10-day periods. Based on these conclusions and within 10 days following the end of the proceeding, the court will set the date when the ruling will be voted and issued. The sentence may not admit the appeal, or it may accept it completely or partially. In practice, this kind of appeal lasts between 18 and 36 months.

Rulings resolving appeals by judicial review can be reviewed through a cassation appeal before the Supreme Court if the dispute has cassational interest.

Cassation appeal with the Supreme Court

Provisions concerning this appeal have been radically modified by Organic Law 7/2015, of 21 July, amending Organic Law 6/1985 of 1 July on Judicial Power, which entered into force on 22 July 2016. Prior to the law reform, there were three types of cassation appeals: ordinary appeals, appeals for the unification of doctrine and appeals in the interest of the law. Now there is only one cassation appeal.

With the new regulations, an appeal can be lodged against rulings issued by the National Court and the High Courts of Justice in any instance and regardless of the amount of the claim, as long as the Supreme Court considers that the case is of objective cassation interest. Therefore, for the first time, it is possible to challenge tax acts concerning local taxes before the Supreme Court, provided that the contended amount exceeds €30,000. Otherwise, the case cannot be referred to the High Courts of Justice.

The new cassation appeal must be prepared in writing and filed with the same court that issued the ruling within 30 days following the day of its notification, stating the intention to appeal, describing succinctly how formal requirements are met, identifying the rules or jurisprudence that have been allegedly contradicted and arguing that the appeal has cassational interest. If the established requirements are met, the court will summon the parties to appear and file the appeal with the Supreme Court within 30 days, and will send the file to the latter court. The appeal application must explain the grounds on which it is based, as well as the rules or jurisprudence deemed violated. Arguments based on matters of fact or evidence are not acceptable.

If the court admits the appeal, it will notify the defendants that have appeared and grant them a 30-day term to submit their opposition. A public hearing might be granted, after which the proceeding will finish and the court will issue its ruling.

iii Appeals concerning autonomous regions' taxes

As for regional taxes, acts concerning transferred state taxes can be challenged through the same type of appeals as those established for state taxes. The only peculiarity is that resolutions issued by economic-administrative tribunals must be appealed at the judicial review level before the high court of justice of the autonomous region. Acts concerning the autonomous regions' own taxes may be appealed pursuant to each region's regulations. Most regions have their own administrative bodies to deal with this type of claim, which operate in a way resembling that of the state economic-administrative tribunals. Decisions issued by these bodies can be challenged before the courts of justice and before the Supreme Court.

iv Special tax procedures

Exceptions of unconstitutionality

Under Article 163 of the Spanish Constitution (and Article 35 of the Organic Law of the Constitutional Court), if a judge or court, whether of its own volition or at the request of either party, deems that a binding rule applicable to the case, and on the validity of which the ruling depends, might be contrary to the Constitution, the judge or court must submit an exception of unconstitutionality to the Constitutional Court.

An exception of unconstitutionality may only be presented by a court. However, this does not mean that the taxpayers' will is irrelevant, as they may trigger an exception by justifying before the judge or court the need for it, duly based on the grounds they consider relevant. Therefore, it must be acknowledged that this provision allows taxpayers to argue the validity of the statute that might have generated the due and challenged tax, or that might be relevant for its application.

If the exception is admitted for consideration, the judicial proceeding will be suspended until the Constitutional Court issues its ruling.

If the ruling deems the provision to be unconstitutional, it will also declare the nullity of the challenged provision, and of those to which it will be extended by connection or consequence. In this case, the judge or court that filed the exception must issue a ruling accepting the taxpayer's appeal and declaring the nullity of the tax reassessment.

The Constitutional Court's ruling will have erga omnes effects, except for cases where the ruling is final. However, the Constitutional Court has conferred on itself the possibility of limiting the retrospective effects of its rulings. In these cases, its decisions will have immediate effect, preventing taxpayers that suffered the effects of the provisions rejected from the legal system from initiating a proceeding to recover the unduly paid tax. Taxpayers will only be able to benefit from this proceeding if it was initiated before the ruling.

Scope of tax ruling effects

To reduce the number of proceedings that have brought the Spanish courts to a standstill, and to provide a quick response to previously submitted conflicts – even by other taxpayers – analysed by the courts, the regulations determining the judicial review proceeding enable taxpayers that argue the correctness of tax returns to request that final rulings issued for identical cases be applied to their case without having to go through the whole appeal proceeding (Article 110 of Act 29/1998 of 13 July, regulating judicial review jurisdiction). The aim is to avoid procedures that would only result in repetitive rulings.

Any decision granting a request of nullity has consequences for all parties, people or entities affected by the annulled act without the need to lodge an application to extend the effects, but not on third parties. Under this provision, as the ruling acknowledges individual legal situations, its effects may extend to any third party in an identical situation that requests the acknowledgment of the same legal situation.

The Supreme Court has accepted in various rulings that annulment of a tax return amounts to the acknowledgment of an individual legal situation (among others, rulings of 1 July 2007 and 20 September 2007). Therefore, if the reason for annulment arises in other cases, it must be possible to extend the effects to reduce the time taken to reach a ruling that will end up acknowledging the same legal situation.

The extension of effects must be requested within one year of the notification of the ruling to the parties in the proceeding. The key requirement for the extension of effects to be applicable is that the legal situations must be identical, since this will ensure that the proceeding and the legal debate will only be avoided when cases have actually been analysed and settled. This requirement will not be met if the extension of effects is requested for a situation that has become final.

In practice, the courts require that taxpayers requesting the application to their case of a ruling that favourably resolved a case identical to their own must exhaust any appeal proceeding before filing for a judicial review, and must be in that precise instance. This makes the extension of effects less attractive, as it involves enduring the administrative ordeal and, where applicable, the previous judicial review, as well as initiating the judicial review proceeding before requesting the extension of effects. However, it is still a way of resolving controversial cases more quickly while safeguarding legal security.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Tax irregularities or inaccuracies can be divided into three types, depending on the degree of the penalties that the administration imposes.

i Non-punishable inaccuracies

If a taxpayer makes a mistake in a self-assessed tax return resulting from a grounded and reasonable interpretation of the tax statutes, the tax authorities can demand payment of any amounts due and unpaid plus default interest, but it cannot impose a penalty. Sanctions can only be imposed if the taxpayer's actions are negligent or intentional.

ii Inaccuracies resulting in an administrative penalty

If the irregularity committed by the taxpayer results from negligent or intentional behaviour, the tax authorities, besides demanding payment of the due amount and default interest, can impose a fine. The statutory prescription period for imposing administrative sanctions is four years. Actions considered to be punishable tax infractions are listed in the General Tax Act (Articles 191–206) and in the specific provisions for each tax. The main tax infractions are:

a Filing an incorrect declaration or self-assessed tax return that results in failure to pay all or part of the applicable tax debt. This is the most common infraction. The relevant sanctions are:

- if the unpaid due amount is equal to or less than €3,000 or no data have been concealed, the fine is 50 per cent of the unpaid amount;
- if the unpaid due amount exceeds €3,000 and data have been concealed, the fine will range between 50 and 100 per cent of the unpaid amount; and

- if failure to pay the due amount is a consequence of the taxpayer resorting to fraudulent means (such as double accounting, fake bills and use of intermediaries), the fine will range between 100 and 150 per cent of the due amount.
- b* Unduly declaring tax credits, which would allow a tax reduction in upcoming periods. In this case, the penalties would be as follows:
- if the unduly declared tax credits were applied to the base amounts, the fine is 15 per cent of the due amount; and
  - if the unduly declared tax credits were applied to the assessment, the fine is 50 per cent of the due amount.

If the offender accepts and does not appeal against the regularisation (tax amount plus default interest) carried out by the tax authorities, the sanction will be reduced by 30 per cent. If, besides accepting and not challenging the fine, the taxpayer pays it, an additional 25 per cent reduction will apply.

iii Inaccuracies amounting to criminal tax offences

These are established in the Criminal Code (Article 305 and following). The last amendment was made in Organic Law 7/2012, of 27 December, which envisages two types of offences: ordinary and serious offences. If the tax authorities suspect a criminal tax offence, they will discontinue the administrative proceeding and refer the case to the Office of the Public Prosecutor for it to file a claim or lawsuit with the Criminal Court, which will continue to investigate the case. However, the tax assessment procedure will continue, separating into different assessment elements of the tax obligation not linked to the potential offence against the Treasury and elements linked to it, notwithstanding the referral of the case to the relevant jurisdiction or to the Office of the Public Prosecutor for it to file a claim or lawsuit with the Criminal Court. The referral will suspend the prescription period of the right to assess the tax debt and impose penalties.

Ordinary offences

Ordinary criminal tax offences must be prosecuted within five years. For an irregularity committed by a taxpayer to be considered a criminal offence, two requirements must be met:

- a* the defrauded amount must be greater than €120,000. This amount is set independently for each tax and annual period; and
- b* the taxpayer's behaviour must be intentional: that is, awareness and the will to mislead the Treasury must be proved.

Three types of criminal sanctions are imposed: one to five years of imprisonment; a fine ranging between 100 and 600 per cent of the defrauded amount; and the loss of entitlement to grants and tax benefits, and of the possibility to enter into contracts with the Public Administration for up to six years.

Serious criminal tax offences

This crime may be prosecuted within 10 years. In addition to the above requirements, at least one of the following circumstances must occur: the defrauded amount must exceed €600,000; tax fraud must be committed within an organisation or criminal group; and prosecution of the crime must be complex because of the use of tax havens, trustees, trusts or similar instruments to conceal the taxpayer's true identity.

There are three types of criminal penalties: two to six years of imprisonment; a fine ranging between 200 and 600 per cent of the defrauded amount; and the loss of entitlement to grants and tax benefits, and of the possibility to enter into contracts with the Public Administration for up to eight years.

Finally, if fraud was committed by a legal person, as well as the sanction applicable to the natural person declared guilty, the legal person will also be guilty of the criminal offence and will be sanctioned with a fine of 200 per cent of the defrauded or improperly obtained amount if the sanction applicable to the natural person is over two years of imprisonment; or a fine ranging between 200 and 400 per cent of the defrauded or improperly obtained amount if the sanction applicable to the natural person is over five years of imprisonment.

i Recovering overpaid tax

One main consequence of the Spanish tax system placing the burden of calculating the tax amount on taxpayers, who must self-assess and pay nearly all of the most important taxes, is that the state needs to invest a vast amount of resources in verifying the accuracy of these self-assessments.

Along with the verification that the tax authorities carry out, the legal system also allows taxpayers to amend their self-assessed tax returns. Logically, amendments to self-assessments can give rise to two results: either in favour of the authorities, by increasing the amount of tax liability or reducing the amount of overpaid tax to be returned; or in favour of the taxpayer if the self-assessment seemingly harms any legitimate interests, which can occur if:

- a* the amount of tax paid is deemed excessive;
- b* the taxpayer has requested a return of overpaid tax, the amount of which is lower than the amount the taxpayer would be entitled to;
- c* if the taxpayer has proved a tax credit, its amount is lower than the amount deemed applicable; and
- d* any reconsideration of facts or legal interpretations does not result in a direct benefit for the tax authorities in the above terms.

Amendments favouring the tax authorities entail that they must accept the complementary self-assessed return that the taxpayer may file, and acknowledge its validity without any justification or concrete evidence attesting to the correctness of the rectification. If the amendment favours the taxpayer, the latter must provide evidence supporting the amendment, and only if the authorities approve will they issue an administrative decision accepting the taxpayer's request. Thus, under Article 120.3 of the General Tax Act, taxpayers can amend their self-assessments, but they must persuade the tax authorities of the appropriateness of the requested amendment to obtain a favourable decision.

If the rectification determines that the tax paid exceeds the final tax liability, the taxpayer will be entitled to recover the unduly paid amount along with default interest, the calculation of which will depend on whether the amount was paid when the tax return was filed (in which case it is considered undue overpaid tax) or the tax to be returned derives from payments that were initially due, such as payments on account made by third parties in excess of the final tax liability, or split payments made by the taxpayer (in which case it is considered overpaid due tax).

In the first case, default interest is generated from the day the undue payment was made; in the second case, it will only be generated if six months have elapsed since the amendment was requested without a decision being issued.

If the tax authorities reject the amendments, the taxpayer can initiate a tax dispute defending the petition, first with the administrative or economic-administrative tribunals, and second with the judicial review courts, under the same terms applicable to a tax assessment submitted involving the same tax and period as the self-assessment amendment sought.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

The Spanish legal system is based on civil law, and therefore on the supremacy of written law. As such, taxpayers are only permitted to challenge an administrative decision if they allege that the tax authorities' decision is contrary to the law. In that event, the taxpayer is required to reason and evidence the infringement of the tax legislation by the tax authorities.

iii Claimants

Pursuant to the General Tax Act, taxpayers, and any person whose legitimate interests have been or could be affected as a result of the tax authorities' decision, will be entitled to dispute the tax.

Regarding VAT, under Spanish law, both the taxpayer who charges the VAT and the recipient of the transaction who bears the economic burden and pays the tax have standing to file a tax claim in connection with the refund of unlawful VAT levied on the transaction.

VI COSTS

Appeals at the administrative or economic-administrative level do not involve any costs for taxpayers, as the intervention of lawyers and court agents is not compulsory and no administrative taxes are levied at this stage.

At the judicial level, the intervention of lawyers and court agents is mandatory. Lawyers' fees are freely agreed on by the parties. Court agents' fees (called 'rights' in Spanish) are determined in Royal Decree 1373/2033, of 7 November and depend on the amount of the proceeding. Thus, an appeal where the claimed amount exceeds €601,012 will generate €1,540 on that €601,012, and €11.24 per €6,010 exceeding that amount. The above regulation allows court agents to agree an increase or reduction of up to 12 points on the amounts set.

Until July 2016, besides lawyers' and court agents' fees, claimants who were not individuals had to pay the judicial tax established for each type of appeal under Act 10/2012, of 20 November (regulating certain fees related to the Administration of Justice and the National Institute of Toxicology and Forensic Science). However, the Constitutional Court declared those taxes unconstitutional in its ruling of 21 July 2016.

The described costs are recoverable. Under Article 139 of the Judicial Review Jurisdiction Act, costs must generally be paid by the unsuccessful party, regardless of whether it is the appellant or the administration. However, several criteria in this Article have given rise to considerable interpretative confusion. In any case, the courts can condemn parties to pay all or part of the costs, or limit their amount. In practice, courts usually limit costs to €6,000. Court agents' rights and judicial taxes are usually paid in full, whereas lawyers' fees are subject to wider discretion.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

To reduce the high tax litigation rate, the General Tax Act has introduced some measures to facilitate the tax authorities' informative duties, the most important of which are:

- a* The right granted to taxpayers to submit enquiries to the Directorate-General for Taxation, under Articles 88 and 90 of the General Tax Act, on any matter arising from the application of the tax rules, such as the tax regime, classification or rating that applies in each case, or questions regarding the fulfilment of material or formal obligations, or the exercise of rights. The interpretative criteria in the Directorate-General's rulings are binding and must be applied by the tax authorities not only to the applicant, but also to any other taxpayer, provided the facts and circumstances of the case are identical.
- b* Advance valuation agreements on real estate. Taxpayers can request the administration to set the value, for tax purposes, of the properties they intend to purchase or transfer. Such valuation is binding on the administration, provided that the disposal takes place within three months.
- c* Transfer pricing. Taxpayers can request that the administration set, for tax purposes, the value of income, products, goods, costs or other elements of the tax debt involved in transactions between related enterprises and people.
- d* Friendly procedures in direct taxation. Friendly procedures are a mechanism to solve conflicts between two tax administrations from different states when the actions of one (or both) of them might give cause to a tax levy that does not comply with the double taxation treaty signed by both states, or result in double taxation. Thus, they are used to settle issues that are not resolved in the provisions of these bilateral agreements.

To regulate these issues, a Regulation on Friendly Procedures in Direct Taxation was approved under Royal Decree 1794/2008, of 3 November, the scope of which encompasses the following procedures:

- a* the friendly procedure established in double taxation treaties entered into between Spain and other states. This procedure can be resorted to when a taxpayer believes that the measures adopted by one or both states entail or might entail taxation contrary to the agreement provisions; and
- b* the friendly procedure established in Convention 90/436/EEC, on the Elimination of Double Taxation in connection with the Adjustment of Profits of Associated Enterprises. This can only be resorted to where, for the purposes of taxation, results included in the profits of an enterprise of a contracting state are also included or are likely to be included in the profits of an enterprise of another contracting state, provided both states are parties to the European Convention on Arbitration.

The above friendly procedures will be initiated, in any case, at the request of the taxpayer. However, their processing and resolution is deferred to the relevant authorities of both states. As it is an independent and extraordinary procedure, a friendly procedure is compatible with lodging appeals within the internal legal system of both states.

The aim of these procedures is to ensure that the administrations of the states involved reach an agreement on whether it is appropriate to eliminate double taxation. If they agree that it must be eliminated, the taxpayer that resorted to the procedure may accept or reject this agreement. In the former case, the taxpayer must abandon any ordinary or extraordinary appeal filed against the act that gave cause to the friendly procedure. Otherwise, the taxpayer can continue with the appeal proceedings.

The administrations' agreement, which will become final through the taxpayer's acceptance, will be executed by issuing the corresponding tax assessment, or by amending or annulling the previous ones.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

i The principle of legal assessment

The principle of legal assessment is included in Article 13 of the General Tax Act, which envisages that the tax authorities, by demanding the fulfilment of tax obligations, may disregard the form, name and type of legal transaction used by taxpayers, deducing the transaction's true legal nature from its considerations and compensations, since, obviously, if the authorities had to accept the name used by the taxpayers, they could easily avoid taxes. Therefore, the authorities are not bound by the name that the parties give to the facts, acts or transactions they carry out or agree on.

The same article establishes the principle of marginalisation of the possible invalidity of acts or contracts due to defects, with the aim of preventing the tax levy from being postponed or hindered because of problems arising from controversial legal questions posed, or likely to be posed, regarding their validity.

This power of the tax authorities is not universal, but has a qualitatively more restricted value, as it only allows taxes to be levied on the wealth actually revealed, even if that is not apparent from the contracts or transactions used. This power does not convert the tax authorities into a civil judge, generically enabling them to reassess legal relationships in the way most favourable to their collection interests, as reassessment, strictly speaking, can only be carried out on what the taxpayer assessed incorrectly due to an obvious contradiction between the external form of the transaction and the form arising from its legal regime, which needs to be adequately justified.

Besides this power of the tax authorities, a series of instruments, such as the adjustments to related-party transactions and a conflict on the application of the tax rule, must not be mistaken for this power of assessment, despite complementing the tax authorities' powers that aim to prevent actions that may be detrimental to the Treasury.

ii Conflict on the application of the rule and simulation

The Spanish tax legal system does not prevent taxpayers from carrying out acts or legal transactions they deem most appropriate to obtain tax savings. However, these acts must be those that would naturally lead to the sought consequences. Provided this principle is met, these acts qualify as what is known as an 'economising option'.

For a case to be considered as an economising option, the taxpayer's saving must not derive from evasive manoeuvres or from the abuse of law or legal forms. An economising option is implemented through the correct application of the rule, or by taking advantage of the possibilities that the legislator afforded when regulating a specific situation or transaction. However, besides the economising option, other instruments also enable the tax authorities to prevent the taxpayer from reducing the tax burden in an artificial or fraudulent way.

The first is 'conflict on the application of the tax rule', described in Article 15 of the General Tax Act, regulating tax fraud. For this to be applicable, three requirements must be met: the chosen legal forms must be unusual and inappropriate considering the aim pursued by the parties; the parties' economic result must be considerably similar to the result they would have achieved if they had used the legal regime appropriate to the pursued aim; and as a result of all the above, the taxpayer must obtain tax advantages involving the lack of taxation or reduced taxation.

In the case of conflict on the application of the tax rule (tax fraud) and the case of the economising option, there is a coincidence between the pattern chosen and the reality, there is no opposition to the wording of the law, and a tax saving is achieved. However, in the first case, this saving derives from avoiding the application of the rule that would naturally be applicable to the acts carried out. In short, in the case of tax fraud, the transaction is carried out to achieve a result that is not typical of the transaction, despite being the consequence of it. The difference with the economising option lies in the taxpayer's motivations, which makes it difficult to discern whether it qualifies as one or other case.

The consequence of the declaration of conflict, which must be made through a special independent procedure in which the taxpayer will always be granted the right to defence, is that: the tax rule that would have been applicable to the usual or appropriate acts will be applied to the act or transaction carried out; the tax advantages will be denied; and an assessment of default interest will be issued.

The lack of a direct breach of law previously made it impossible to impose penalties if a conflict about the application of the tax rule was declared. However, following the amendment of the General Tax Law, penalties can be imposed before the beginning of the period to file the tax return if other substantially equal acts or transactions have previously been declared as tax fraud, and this declaration has been made public. Acts in breach of Article 15 of the General Tax Act are regarded as serious offences.

Another instrument that enables the tax authorities to refute forced and illegal tax reductions and avoidance is simulation, established under Article 16 of the General Tax Act. Simulations aim to alter the facts to obtain a tax saving or avoid the taxable facts. Altering facts involves concealing, disguising or modifying them. Therefore, simulation is synonymous with concealment and fraud.

In this case, the tax authorities may classify the legal transaction that the taxpayer intended to hide, a classification that may only result in tax-related effects; levy the appropriate tax and default interest; and, where applicable, impose the due penalty.

iii Sound business reasons and economic substance

In several areas of the legal system, the tax authorities have the power to regularise the taxpayers' situation if it deems that the purpose of their legal transactions is fraudulent or abusive.

One example is found in restructuring operations that file for the special tax-neutral regime. This regime entails the transposition into the Spanish legal system of Council Directive 2009/133/EC of 19 October 2009, on the common system of taxation applicable to mergers, divisions, partial divisions, transfers of assets and exchanges of shares concerning companies of different Member States, and to the transfer of the registered office of an SE or SCE between Member States.

In practice, as far as corporate tax is concerned, the regime entails deferring the taxation of capital gains that might be concealed in the transferred assets, the transfer of which would normally make them apparent, until their actual disposal. To that effect, the value for tax purposes will be the historical one, which allows taxation to be deferred without it being suppressed.

As regards other taxes such as VAT and capital transfer tax and stamp duty, this regime entails that taxation will not take place at the time of the restructuring operation.

However, the Directive itself establishes that a Member State can refuse to apply the regime if the aim of the transaction is fraudulent or to avoid taxes. This provision has been included in the internal Spanish regulations, which lay down the presumption that the transaction will be considered fraudulent or intended to avoid taxes when it has not been carried out for valid economic reasons, but to obtain a tax advantage.

Therefore, the tax authorities have the power to argue whether the merger, partial division, exchange of shares or transfer of assets carried out by the taxpayer to which the deferral regime has been applied is based on real economic or entrepreneurial motivations that make it advisable or, on the contrary, its main purpose is to artificially reduce taxes.

Conversely, the tax authorities increasingly resort to their above-mentioned assessment power, demanding that legal transactions have an economic substance. This is an import of the American principle of 'economic substance' under which, for a transaction to be deemed valid, it must have an economic motivation that is not to reduce tax liability.

The tax authorities may consider as an indication of fraud or tax avoidance intention the absence of economic substance in any legal transactions carried out by the taxpayer. Therefore, any transaction entailing a tax saving must be motivated by clear and relevant economic reasons (business purpose).

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

Under Spanish law, provisions established in international treaties and conventions prevail over contrary or incompatible domestic rules. The Spanish tax authorities are fully aware of this fact, and the cases in which they fail to observe this hierarchy are not common. Naturally, discussions are currently being held with the tax authorities regarding the correct interpretation of relevant provisions or rules of tax treaties or conventions, which are resolved through appeals lodged with the Spanish or international courts (in the case of the Court of Justice of the European Union), or by recourse to a mutual agreement procedure, or arbitration, as may be provided by a treaty or convention.

There are no specific domestic rules or guidelines regarding the interpretation of tax treaties. However, case law exists that deals with specific interpretations of some of the provisions of international law based on specific discussions submitted to the tax authorities, tax tribunals or tax courts. Nevertheless, in the interpretation of treaties and conventions, the Spanish tax authorities take into consideration opinions issued by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, such as, in particular, the revised version of the Comments on the Model Tax Convention on Income and on Capital or the transfer pricing reports (Transfer Pricing Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises and Tax Administrations). Additionally, Spain is a signatory to the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which is important in connection with the interpretation of general matters concerning tax treaties and conventions.

The application of domestic tax law is conditional upon the norms established at the level of the EU, either as a prohibition to any discrimination contrary to the freedoms declared in the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union or as an obligation to coordinate laws on any areas (such as regulations on VAT). The Spanish administration usually respects these limits and does not apply any tax law that has been considered contrary to the EU law, even if it has not been formally derogated through a new provision. To interpret the limits within the scope of the EU, taxpayers and the tax authorities themselves usually rely on precedents of the Court of Justice of the European Union (case law) as well as opinions issued by EU bodies (such as the Commission).

Finally, most agreements on double taxation signed by Spain envisage a friendly proceeding between Member States aimed at preventing such taxation. The procedure must be initiated at the request of the taxpayer who considers that measures adopted by either one or both states involve or might involve taxation that is contrary to the treaty's provisions, regardless of the appeals established by internal law. The procedure must be initiated within three years before the administration of the Member State where the taxpayer resides.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

At the beginning of every year, the Spanish Tax Agency's main focuses concerning the taxpayers' tax status are published in the Official Gazette of the Spanish state (General Guidelines for Annual Plan Tax and Customs Control). In recent years, the most controversial issues resolved by the courts have been the following:

- a* Restructuring operations under the tax-neutral regime established by Council Directive 2009/133/EC, of 19 October 2009, on the common system of taxation applicable to mergers, divisions, partial divisions, transfers of assets and exchanges of shares concerning companies of different Member States and to the transfer of the registered office of an SE or SCE between Member States.
- b* Actions against fraud schemes involving VAT (carousel fraud).
- c* Measures against aggressive tax planning schemes that take advantage of different international jurisdictions to reduce tax. This type of measure mainly concerns large companies and the use of foreign-stock holding companies (ETVE regime) due to the generation of high financial costs in Spain.
- d* Application of the tax-benefit regime in corporate tax (including deductions for research and development, deductions for exportation, deductions for reinvestment in assets and amortisation of goodwill).
- e* Intragroup actions within a company group setting prices that differ from those of the market (transfer pricing).
- f* Problems arising from the incorrect implementation of directives and of the fundamental principles of the Community freedoms (such as recovery of the tax on retail sales of certain hydrocarbons, a worse tax regime for foreigners as regards tax on inheritance and donations, difficulties in recovering the withholding tax exemption on dividends distributed by certain foreign companies and tax exit).
- g* Problems arising from the recovery of state tax aid, contrary to the principle of free competition established in the EU statutes (including tax leases for ships and amortisation of international financial goodwill). Since the amendment to the General Tax Act, it regulates the procedure for implementing the European Commission's decisions requesting the recovery of state tax aid.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

In Spain, there is a high rate of litigiousness on tax matters, which entails that the length of proceedings is excessive: up to 10 years might elapse from the first until the last instance of appeals.

The legal grounds of appeals stem from two main aspects: procedural and formal aspects, and substantial aspects.

Many appeals are upheld in favour of taxpayers due to the tax authorities' procedural mistakes. In 2012, almost one quarter of the appeals accepted by the Supreme Court's rulings were upheld for this reason.

There is an increasing tendency in audits to attack tax-engineering schemes. Although techniques used so far have been mostly ineffective, the courts have become increasingly reluctant to accept aggressive tax-planning schemes, regardless of the administration's approach towards the verification proceeding.

In practice, the tax authorities are rather aggressive when imposing high administrative fines, most of which are annulled by the courts because there is not enough evidence to prove the taxpayers' guilt.

In recent years, there has been a notable increase in the number of cases referred to the criminal courts. In many cases, the taxpayer agrees with the Public Prosecutor to pay the debt and a reduced penalty to avoid imprisonment. According to the latest public statistics, in August 2014 144 people were imprisoned for criminal tax offences. The main causes for these penalties are simulation operations, fraud schemes concerning VAT (carousel fraud), setting up false residences abroad, and concealing undeclared income and wealth in tax havens.

In this regard, one new measure implemented by the recent amendment to the General Tax Act is the annual publication of a list of tax debtors whose tax debts or penalties pending payment exceed €1 million and have not been paid within the voluntary payment period, unless they have been suspended or postponed. This measure will be complemented by Organic Law 10/2015 of 10 September on access and publicity of certain information contained in rulings rendered in tax fraud matters. The law foresees providing access to personal data contained in final unassailable rulings for the claimant regarding tax offences issued after its entry into force on 11 November 2015.

SWITZERLAND

I INTRODUCTION

As a preliminary remark, it should be emphasised that the Swiss tax dispute environment reflects the allocation rules of the fiscal powers between the federal power, referred to as the Confederation and the federal states called cantons. Switzerland has 26 cantons and approximately 2,600 municipalities. In Switzerland, taxes are levied at three different levels: federal, cantonal and municipal. According to Article 3 of the Federal Constitution, the cantons are sovereign insofar as their sovereignty is not limited by the Federal Constitution. This means that each canton independently generates income by levying taxes, unless the Federal Constitution gives the Confederation the exclusive right to levy a particular type of tax. At the cantonal and municipal levels, the tax laws vary depending on the canton and the municipality. The cantons are mainly responsible for the assessment, collection and general administration of their own taxes (e.g., income and equity taxes, inheritance and gift taxes, real estate capital gains and real estate transfer taxes). They also support the administration of federal direct taxes (federal income taxes in particular). Due to the fact that the cantons still have much independence, this can result in significant differences from one canton to another. The municipalities may only levy the taxes that their canton's constitution empowers them to levy.

With regard to the resolution of tax disputes, Switzerland has a well-established and efficient practice. When confronted with an unlawful tax assessment, the taxpayer is generally not obliged to immediately challenge said assessment in court. Rather, he or she may turn to the tax authority that issued the tax assessment decision being challenged, to force it to make a new decision. For the purposes of this chapter, this procedure will be called a formal complaint. A formal complaint is a quick and efficient procedure that allows numerous questions to be resolved with little cost, the majority of these being technical questions. This formal complaint procedure thus eliminates the need for court proceedings and generally takes a few months. However, for complicated issues, this way of appeal offers limited solutions. In such cases, tax authorities usually prefer to wait for a binding judgment made by a higher independent body (i.e., a tribunal). It is very common for taxpayers to exercise their right to challenge the tax assessment decision of a tax authority. Tax authorities then issue a decision on formal complaint.

If the taxpayer does not agree with this decision, he or she may start judicial proceedings before the competent administrative court. From an organisational point of view, administrative courts are fully independent from tax authorities. Judicial proceedings may take between one and two years before judgment, generally depending on the workload of the tribunals and the complexity of the matter. There are two levels of administrative courts (i.e., the lower administrative court and the second instance administrative court) before appealing to the Federal Supreme Court.

Contrary to the formal complaint procedure before tax authorities, proceedings before the lower administrative court, the second instance court and the Federal Supreme Court are subject to court fees depending on the amount in dispute. Those fees are only to be borne by the taxpayer if he or she loses. In the case where the taxpayer partially wins, he or she will have to pay part of the court fees. To the extent that the taxpayer wins in court, his or her adviser's costs may be partially borne by the state.

i Initiation of the tax assessment procedure

Each individual subject to tax in Switzerland needs to file a tax return each year in relation to income and wealth taxes on a self-assessment basis normally within three months of the end of the tax period, corresponding to the calendar year. Most cantons allow at least a deadline extension. The same applies to legal entities subject to corporate tax in Switzerland.

With regard to partnerships (sole or collective proprietorship), income is attributed to each partner and is apportioned according to the investment in the partnership. Each partner is responsible for filing his or her own personal tax return and tax is paid at personal income tax rates. Wealth tax is moreover paid on the company's assets.

Regarding withholding tax, stamp tax and VAT, the principle of 'spontaneous taxation' applies, meaning that the taxpayer must determine himself the amount of tax due, declare it and pay said amount to tax authorities.

In the field of taxes related to possession (e.g., cars, boats, dogs) and property transfer tax, taxation takes place by way of an administrative decision generally following the announce from the taxpayer. The latter then has to pay the tax.

ii Issuance of the tax assessment decision

After the filing of the tax return, the same is reviewed by the responsible tax commissioner and an assessment decision issued by the tax authority follows. In this respect, it should be noted that the cantonal tax authorities can assess cantonal income taxes in respect of individuals and legal entities, as well as direct federal tax, which includes income tax. Other taxes (e.g., withholding tax, stamp tax and VAT) are assessed by the Federal Tax Administration only.

The assessment decision determines the tax base, the applicable tax rate and the tax amount. This decision is an administrative decision, notified in writing to the taxpayer and jointly to the spouses. In the absence of an objection, it constitutes a final binding decision.

In the presence of indicators showing that the tax return would not be accurate, the tax authorities may deviate from it after investigation. In that regard, it should be noted that the taxpayer has additional duties relating to his or her general duty to collaborate with tax authorities for ensuring that the taxation is complete and accurate. On request, he or she must provide additional information, documents, accounting documents, etc.

In the case where the taxpayer does not comply with his or her obligation to file a tax return or if the taxable elements cannot be sufficiently determined, the tax authority is entitled to assess the tax due at its own discretion with regard to the factual elements at its disposal and empirical figures.

iii Initiation of tax disputes

Tax disputes usually start by way of an appeal by the taxpayer against a tax assessment decision rendered by a tax authority. At this early stage, the taxpayer has to file a formal complaint before the same tax authority that made the assessment decision. In the fields of withholding tax, stamp tax and VAT, disputes usually arise as a result of a tax audit conducted by the Federal Tax Administration.

iv Time limits

In situations where the taxpayer does not comply with his or her obligation to file a tax return or if the taxable elements cannot be sufficiently determined, the tax authority is entitled to assess the tax due at its own discretion with regard to the factual elements at its disposal and empirical figures.

As a general rule, the right to tax expires five years after the end of the accounting period. This time period is suspended during appeal proceedings. A new five-year time limit starts every time the competent authority takes measures aiming at determining or getting the payment of the tax due and informs the taxpayer.

v Voluntary disclosure

An important element of the Swiss tax disputes is the voluntary disclosure system. Under Swiss tax law, taxpayers are offered a voluntary disclosure programme for undeclared assets and income, which are subject to taxation in Switzerland. The voluntary disclosure programme is also available to heirs in the case of succession.

For both voluntary disclosure in succession cases and ordinary voluntary disclosure, there is no criminal prosecution (no penalties). The taxpayer thus only has to pay the due taxes and default interests for the past 10 years or the past three years before the decedent's death.

To benefit from the voluntary disclosure programme, the application must be filed for the first time in the taxpayer's lifetime and deemed voluntary. The taxpayer has to disclose all relevant information of the last 10 years and has to cooperate with tax authorities. Heirs only need to regularise the last three years before the testator passed away. The taxpayer must endeavour to clear the total tax burden eventually and act proactively in cases of financial difficulties.

The duration of the procedure depends on the canton involved and mainly on the complexity of the case.

vi Revision

In the cases where the taxpayer was not aware of materially incorrect facts taken into account by the tax authority during the assessment or the audit, he or she may claim that the authorities have made an error of assessment based on the incorrect facts (petition for revision). Said petition for revision is only considered if important new facts or evidence are discovered and could not have been known during the ordinary proceedings, if the tax authority failed to consider important facts that were or should have been known, in the case of a significant violation of procedural principles, or if a crime or criminal offence influenced the tax assessment or decision.

vii Release of information

According to the Federal Constitution, all taxpayers, within a certain time and factual limits, have the right to access their tax files. This may be a useful tool for taxpayers.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Formal complaint with the tax authority

When the taxpayer objects the assessment decision made by the tax authority, he or she may file a formal complaint with the same tax authority which issued the assessment decision, within 30 days as from notification. The formal complaint procedure is an official appeal procedure that forces the tax authority to issue a new decision.

This procedure is at the taxpayer's disposal regarding decisions issued in the fields of income tax (corporate income tax), wealth tax (capital tax), withholding tax, stamp tax and VAT for individuals and legal entities.

As to the form and content of the formal complaint, it must be filed in writing. With regard to federal income tax, the complaint does not need, in principle, to be substantially motivated. The taxpayer only has to express his or her unquestionable disagreement with the assessment decision. However, formal complaint against an assessment decision made at the tax authority's own discretion must be well motivated. In that case, the taxpayer has to demonstrate that the assessment decision is obviously inaccurate. For the taxes levied by the Federal Tax Administration, the form requirements are stricter.

If the formal requirements are met, the tax authority has to re-examine the tax assessment decision and may either modify in whole or in part the decision or reject the taxpayer's formal complaint.

ii Appeal before a first instance court (cantonal appeal commission)

As a preliminary remark, the proper delimitation of taxation remedies is rather complex because it depends on the tax type in question, the jurisdiction of the tax authority and the precise characterisation of the contested decision. Moreover, due to the growing complexity of the tax area, various specialised commissions of appeal have been created, both at the cantonal and federal levels.

An appeal before the cantonal appeal commission is open on decisions rendered in direct tax matters. In Geneva, the first instance administrative court is the competent court and is composed of one judge who acts as president and two other judges, specialised in tax matters.

As for formal complaint, the appeal must contain a presentation of the facts, conclusions and evidences. The deadline for appeal is 30 days as from notification of the contested decision on formal complaint. The appeal can be filed by either the tax authority or the taxpayer. The court's decision on appeal must be substantiated and communicated in writing to the appellant and to the authorities participating in the proceedings. Contrary to the formal complaint procedure, appealing before a cantonal appeal commission is not free of charge.

iii Appeal before the second instance cantonal court

A decision of a first instance court can be appealed to a second instance cantonal court within 30 days of service of the first instance court's decision. The appeal can also be filed either by the tax authority or the taxpayer.

The same procedural principles are the same as those applying before the first instance court.

iv Appeal before the Federal Administrative Court

The Federal Administrative Court is the ordinary administrative tribunal of the Swiss Confederation. The main role of the Federal Administrative Court is to examine the legality of decisions in matters falling under the authority of the Federal Administration. Lower instances are mainly the federal departments and subordinate federal offices.

The Federal Administrative Court hears appeals against decisions of federal authorities, in the fields of withholding tax, stamp tax and VAT in particular. As a general rule, submissions should be made in an official language of Switzerland (French, German and Italian). Its judgments may be appealed before the Federal Supreme Court.

Generally speaking, fees are charged for proceedings before the Federal Administrative Court. Procedural costs are usually paid by the unsuccessful party. For pecuniary disputes, they may not exceed 50,000 Swiss francs.

v Appeal before the Federal Supreme Court (Second Public Law Division)

If the taxpayer considers that the final decision of the second instance cantonal court or of the Federal Administrative Court violates his or her rights, he or she may file an appeal in front of the Federal Supreme Court. Such appeal must be filed within 30 days after notification of said contested decision.

The Federal Supreme Court is the highest judicial authority within the federal state. It issues final rulings in tax matters.

It should be noted that the work of the Federal Supreme Court varies considerably from the cantonal and federal courts of first instance. This court actually does not re-establish the facts of the case. These facts may only be corrected by the Federal Supreme Court if it finds that they have been incorrectly established in a flagrant manner by the lower court, or that they have been based on a violation of law. This means that the Federal Supreme Court only takes its decisions applying the law on already determined facts.

In general, the Federal Supreme Court renders its rulings in the language of the decision being contested.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

i Criminal penalties

As a preliminary remark, it should be underlined that regarding direct taxes, the fact that the taxpayer seeks to save taxes is not punishable. In Swiss tax law, offences and sanctions are designed as follows.

Negligent failure to carry out procedural duties refers to situations, for example, where the taxpayer fails to file a tax return or does not with a duty to provide information. Regarding the sanction, for income and equity taxes, the penalty is limited to 10,000 Swiss francs. For other types of taxes, the limit differs.

The unlawful reduction of the tax due may be penalised on two main grounds. On the one hand, tax evasion (i.e., where the taxpayer with intent or negligently omits certain items in his her tax return, or generally causes a final assessment to be incomplete) belongs to the lowest category of criminal offences and is only subject to a fine. The fine may vary from one-third to three times the amount of tax evaded (Article 175(2) of the Federal Income Tax Act and corresponding cantonal provisions), with a statute of limitation of 10 years (Article 184 (1 letter b) of the Federal Income Tax Act).

Regarding attempted tax evasion, the fine amounts to two-thirds of the amount determined for complete tax evasion. The statute of limitations is six years (Article 184 (1 letter a) of the Federal Income Tax Act).

On the other hand, tax fraud is a qualified offence that requires the use of fraudulent documents (e.g., a balance sheet not showing the correct assets and liabilities). Inexact salary certificates are considered a more serious criminal offence. Indeed, Article 186 of the Federal Income Tax Act provides that the maximal penalties for this offence are imprisonment up to three years and a fine of a minimum of 10,000 Swiss francs. The statute of limitations in cases of tax fraud is 15 years according to Article 189(1) of the Federal Income Tax Act.

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

Regarding income tax, in the situation where the taxpayer paid a too high portion of provisional taxes, meaning that the amount of tax actually due is lower than the amount provisionally paid, the overpayment is refunded. This procedure occurs automatically. In the case of overpaid taxes, these are refunded or set off against other liabilities due to the tax authority upon request. For federal income tax, the refund claim can be made up to five years after the year when the overpayment was made (Article 168 of the Federal Income Tax Act). In Geneva, however, the limitation period starts from the moment when the taxpayer becomes aware of the overpayment. In any case, the overpaid amounts bear interest in favour of the taxpayer.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Administrative decisions may be challenged on the grounds that they are unlawful, by lodging a formal complaint or an appeal (see Section II, supra). This would also be the case where administrative decisions would be contrary to legitimate expectation or to the Federal Constitution. In specific cases, the unlawfulness may also result from the taxpayer in question being discriminated in relation with another taxpayer.

iii Claimants

Generally speaking, the rule is that only the taxpayer to whom the tax assessment has been noticed is entitled to bring a tax claim against the authorities. Depending on the case and the circumstances, other persons or entities may have the right to lodge appeal (e.g., another tax authority in inter-cantonal double taxation cases, legal representative, heirs, management of the bankrupt's assets). With regard to direct income tax, it should be underlined that the competent cantonal tax authority as well as the Federal Tax Administration has the right to lodge appeals against tax assessment decisions, without prior duty to lodge a formal complaint.

Regarding VAT, entities having their seat or a permanent establishment on the Confederation territory and that are united under a single direction may apply to be treated as a single taxable person (tax group). It should be noted that entities that do not exploit a business as well as individuals may be part of a group (Article 13 VAT Act). In the case of such tax group, the group representative lodges the VAT return consolidating the VAT accounting of each group entities. This entity will therefore be the addressee of the tax assessment decision. All entities are, however, severally responsible for the tax due (Article 15 VAT Act).

With regard to withholding tax, the liable person is not the same as the one that has a right, under Swiss law or treaty law, to a partial or full refund of the withholding tax. Any person applying for a partial or a full refund has the right to lodge a formal complaint against the authorities.

In the field of tax at source, a formal complaint may be lodged by any interested person, meaning the taxpayer and the debtor of the taxable benefit.

VI COSTS

As a general rule, each party bears its own costs. The taxpayer may, however, recover from the state part of the costs in the case of success in front of the court. Even in the cases involving substantial costs, the taxpayer will only recover a small part of them.

Regarding the procedural costs, they shall be partially or fully borne by the losing party. Nevertheless, these costs may also be borne by the successful appellant if his or her behaviour caused or significantly delayed the investigation. Moreover, all or part of the costs incurred because of inquiry measures may be charged to the taxpayer or any other person who is required to provide information, in the situation where these inquiry measures have been made necessary by a breach of procedural duties.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

i Tax ruling procedure

Given the overall complexity of taxation in Switzerland, taxpayers have an interest in discussing the more complex cases with the tax authorities at an early stage, prior to the implementations of any actions. Prospective taxpayers, such as international corporations considering moving to Switzerland, can obtain confirmation of their future taxation. The same is true for individuals.

In that regard, tax rulings are commonly used in the Swiss tax practice, although Swiss tax law does not expressly refer to rulings. It should be noted that a tax ruling does not provide for any more preferential taxation than the applicable law does. This constitutes a quick and efficient way to provide for clarity in regard to taxation. In order to obtain a ruling, the taxpayer has to disclose all relevant information, usually in the form of a letter.

As recently confirmed by the Federal Supreme Court, cantonal tax authorities are the competent authorities to accept tax rulings. If the competent tax authority agrees with the taxpayer, the ruling request is sent back to the taxpayer, which provides the taxpayer with confirmation from the state on the tax treatment of a transaction or a situation. Tax rulings are not public.

Regarding the binding effect of such rulings, the taxpayer is protected by the constitutional principle of good faith insofar as he relies on the information received by the competent tax authority. Swiss case law also especially emphasised the importance of implementing the facts precisely described in the ruling.

There is no legal entitlement for a taxpayer to obtain a binding ruling, even though tax authorities are most of the time willing to deal with ruling requests. This means that a denial or a refusal of a ruling request cannot be contested by taxpayers.

ii Alternative dispute resolution means

With regards to alternative dispute resolution means, double taxation treaties concluded by Switzerland usually refer to mutual agreement procedure. This type of procedure is independent of Swiss domestic law procedures. Thus, the time limits provided for by domestic law have no influence on the mutual agreement procedure and vice versa. In particular, the 30-day deadline to file a claim against a tax assessment decision is not suspended by a request for mutual agreement procedure. In order, to save his or her rights according to Swiss tax law, the taxpayer will generally file a complaint against the tax authority, which will be suspended during the mutual agreement procedure. Depending on various conditions, recently revised double taxation treaties also provide for arbitration if the taxpayer requests the opening of an arbitration procedure, generally in transfer pricing cases.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

In Switzerland, anti-avoidance rules are not contained in a specific act. They actually take different forms.

i General tax avoidance theory

The Federal Supreme Court developed through the years a general tax avoidance theory, in principle applicable to all Swiss taxes. The application of this theory, applied by all Swiss courts and tax authorities, has the consequence that tax authorities have the right to tax the taxpayer's legal structure based on its economic substance if the following conditions are met: the taxpayer's legal structure is unusual, inappropriate or inadequate to its economic purpose; tax considerations are deemed to be the only motive for the transaction; and the transaction effectively leads to significant tax savings to the extent that it would be accepted by tax authorities.

ii Transfer pricing

Even though Switzerland does not have a formal transfer pricing legislation, all related party transactions with Swiss entities must respect the arm's-length principle. Generally speaking, Swiss tax authorities follow the OECD transfer pricing guidelines. Where the transfer price does not correspond to the arm's-length price, a hidden profit distribution is assumed and taxable income is adjusted (Article 58 of the Federal Income Tax Act). The arm's-length principle is also applicable in choosing the method of determination of mark-ups.

iii Thin capitalisation

In Switzerland, the thin capitalisation rules are embodied in a circular letter issued by the Federal Tax Administration (circular letter No. 6 of 6 June 1997). This circular letter sets out safe harbour rules that require a minimum equity ratio for each asset class. Any excess amount of debt is recharacterised as dividend subject to withholding tax and interests paid for excessive debt are not deductible (Article 65 of the Federal Income Tax Act).

iv Controlled foreign companies (CFCs)

There is no CFC regime in Switzerland.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

Generally speaking, Switzerland's tax treaty network is undergoing extensive renewal in accordance with the OECD standard. Regarding the interpretation of international tax treaties, it is accepted that they must be interpreted in accordance with the rules of public international law. Section 3 – Interpretation of Treaties of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which entered into force in Switzerland in 1990, thus applies for the interpretation of DTTs.

In a recent cross-border case relating to total return swap agreements and other derivatives, the Federal Supreme Court denied the refund of withholding tax on the banks' declared dividend income for the main reason that the banks were not beneficial owners of the income, as the banks acted as a sort of intermediary companies which were legally, economically or factually forced to transfer the dividend income to their counterparties. Therefore, the banks could not claim the benefit of the double tax treaty (Switzerland – Denmark in this case). In that regard, the Court also answered the question left open by the Swiss Federal Administrative Tribunal regarding the interpretation of double tax treaties drafted and signed before 1977, which do not contain the beneficial ownership requirement. In this respect, the majority of federal judges stated that the beneficial ownership criterion is an implicit requirement in all 'old' tax treaties. Thus, even if the double tax treaty Switzerland – Denmark did not contain an explicit reference to this requirement, tax authorities are entitled to apply the beneficial ownership requirement. The Federal Tax Administration will continue to apply its strict administrative practice and refuse refund of withholding tax in situations where it is assumed that the beneficial ownership is affected due to derivatives strategies.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

In two recent cases, the Federal Supreme Court removed uncertainties surrounding tax rulings and offshore structures. In that regard, the Federal Supreme Court confirmed that the tax authorities should be more severe when dealing with exotic offshore structures. Moreover, the roles between the cantonal and federal tax authorities have been clarified, meaning that only cantonal tax authorities have the power to grant tax rulings.

In recent years, following a decision of the Federal Supreme Court, Swiss tax authorities have also significantly changed their practice with regard to withholding tax, taking a more formalistic view on the notification deadlines to be respected to avoid the retaining of withholding tax (dividend notification procedure). The 30-day deadline for notification becomes a forfeiture deadline rather than an indicative deadline. Consequently, in the case of non-respecting of such notification deadline, withholding tax is immediately due on any dividends that were not declared in the notification procedure and interests on late payment are to be paid on the withholding tax due.

More generally, Swiss tax authorities also pay more attention to transfer pricing issues and take a stricter approach with regard to structures and intra-group transactions involving offshore entities and locations. The Swiss tax authorities are supposed to follow the OECD Guidelines, and therefore the methods said guidelines propose. It is, however, recommended to request a tax ruling depending on the complexity of the case.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Regarding the main prospective legislative changes, Switzerland is undertaking a major reform of the corporate tax system, the Swiss Corporate Tax Reform III (CTR III). The CTR III aims to enhance the attractiveness of Switzerland for companies at the international level while consolidating international acceptance of Switzerland as a business location. At the same time, the Swiss government proposes a package of additional measures in order to improve the Swiss corporate tax system and to safeguard the financial performance of income tax for the Confederation, cantons and communes. In many aspects, these different goals are in contradiction. The key points of the reform are to abolish the special cantonal tax regimes (i.e., holding companies regime, as well as domiciliary and auxiliary or mixed companies regimes) along with a step-up of hidden reserves (including goodwill) for tax purposes allowing substantial depreciation allowances in the years after the abolishment, and the special federal tax treatment of the Swiss principal companies and Swiss finance branches. According to the reform, the above-mentioned regimes would be replaced by measures with increased international acceptance, meaning, for example, the patent box at cantonal level, enhanced tax deductions on expenses incurred for R&D and tax relief for taxation of equity, lower cantonal tax rates for corporate income tax and other measures aiming to increase the systematic nature of Swiss tax law. If accepted by the parliament, the proposed changes are expected to enter into force between 2018 and 2020.

More generally, as mentioned above, it should be remembered that Swiss tax authorities take a stricter approach in many areas, such as in transfer pricing cases, and that many practices that have previously been accepted, in the field of offshore structures for instance, are being challenged more and more by Swiss tax administrations.

I INTRODUCTION

The legislative framework governing the Turkish tax procedure is multi-layered due to the widely dispersed nature of the tax laws, and the complexity of the administrative and judicial bodies involved in their day-to-day application and interpretation. The Code of Tax Procedure (CTP)<sup>2</sup> is the main and umbrella body of law that regulates the Turkish taxation procedure and compliance with the tax laws. The Code of Administrative Trial Procedure (CATP)<sup>3</sup> governs the judicial review of actions and decisions of the regulatory bodies and the appellate review of judgments rendered by the tax courts. In this scope, taxation and public receivable related actions of public and state authorities are by nature considered administrative actions, and disputes regarding them are reviewed and resolved through principles and rules of administrative judicial litigation. In that regard, the main legislation as to the tax courts consists of the Code of Administrative Trial Procedure, the Act of the Establishment of Regional Administrative Courts, Administrative Courts and Tax Courts, and the Council of State Act.<sup>4</sup>

The ultimate regulatory body is the Ministry of Finance,<sup>5</sup> which oversees the Revenue Administration,<sup>6</sup> the national tax regulator responsible for the assessment and collection of taxes, and the Tax Audit Board, the national tax inspection authority. By and large, modernisation of the Turkish tax system has been maintained through up-to-date tax laws enacted by the parliament and legislative supplements in the form of general communiqués, special communiqués and circulars announced by the Revenue Administration from time to time on any given tax issue.

A major legislative overhaul was implemented by the 1998 Tax Reform,<sup>7</sup> which expanded the taxable income base by defining income rather than providing a list of disposable resources, with the aim of combating tax evasion and unrecorded economic activity. In the current tax system, taxes are levied upon three essential sources of revenue: income, wealth and spending. Taxes imposed upon income are income tax and corporation tax; taxes imposed upon wealth are property tax, inheritance and succession tax, and motorised vehicles tax; and taxes imposed upon spending are VAT, banking and insurance transactions tax, special consumption tax, stamp tax, special communication tax, and resource utilisation support fund and customs taxes. Other taxes and duties include municipal taxes and duties withheld by various public authorities.

The most controversial category of tax is the one imposed upon income. Tax disputes in relation to income taxes are mainly attributable to errors made in interpreting the widely dispersed rules of authority by taxpayers during the preparation and filing of their tax declarations, or by the local tax authority in its assessment of the tax base or the tax amount. In addition, although there is a hierarchical order among norms and rules of tax laws, case law and legislative supplements, the local tax authority may choose to apply the rules of law in an arbitrary order (e.g., concurrently), or take a completely different approach with regards to their interpretation, which may result in a 'negative' tax inspection report. Errors, mistakes, and arbitrary actions and decisions of the local tax authority may be challenged before higher authorities of the Ministry of Finance, and made subject to judicial review before the administrative and tax courts, regional administrative courts and the Council of State, and they may be brought to the Constitutional Court in the case of a violation of rights. Taxation in general is subject to administrative adjudication, and tax controversies are resolved before the tax courts.

The main development for 2016 was Law No. 6736 on Restructuring Some of the Public Receivables.<sup>8</sup> It was enacted by the Turkish Parliament with the aim to stimulate the economy, and to promote capital movement by allowing individuals and companies to disclose, settle and restructure their public debts and obligations payable on or prior to 30 June 2016 through offering tax relief and eliminating interest and penalties. The Law also brings taxation advantages for individuals and companies that file voluntary disclosures of their undeclared foreign assets with the relevant institutions in Turkey until the end of 2016. The declared foreign assets would subsequently be repatriated to the Turkish financial system. No separate tax investigation or tax assessment is to be performed provided that the determined tax amount had been paid within the grace period granted under the Law and for taxpayers preferring to increase their tax base.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Tax disputes arise between the taxpayer and the tax administration. Turkish tax law is based on the principle of declaration; however, the administration will not rest with such declarations, but will investigate whether the taxpayer's declaration is truthful. This can be established through the method of tax examinations.

The CTP has adopted two essential types of tax assessment methods: the 'discretionary' method and the 'declaration' method. The discretionary method is applied by the tax assessment commission where statutory rates are announced by the Council of Ministers for a given tax, where calculation of the tax base is problematic due to irregularities in bookkeeping, or where the tax base is recalculated due to a discrepancy revealed in the tax inspection report. The discretionary method is also applied by the local tax authority when a taxpayer fails to file a tax declaration when it is due. Provided that a specific tax law requires application of the declaration method, the CTP stipulates that the local tax authority shall rely on the declarations filed by taxpayers. Under the declaration method, tax declarations filed by taxpayers are admitted as prima facie evidence of the tax base and the tax amount.

The purpose of a tax inspection in that regard is in general and primarily to investigate the accuracy and truthfulness of tax declarations filed by taxpayers and to ensure compliance with the tax laws. The scope of investigation may cover a period of five years, which is the applicable statute of limitations for tax liability under Turkish law. The investigation is carried out by public inspectors who represent the Tax Audit Board, and full cooperation with their requests and demands for production of documents is required of taxpayers. In general, a demand for document production must be complied with within a period of 15 days from the initiation of the tax inspection and receipt of the notice of request for production. Failure to comply with a demand for information and production of documents may subject the taxpayer to a penalty for special irregularity.

The investigation may generally encompass an in-depth review of the statutory books and documents evidencing transactions carried out during the term under review. Based on the information obtained through the tax inspection, the public inspector calculates the tax base and the tax amount, and compares the results with those stated in the tax declaration of the taxpayer. In the event of a discrepancy between these amounts or another form of non-compliance with the tax laws, a 'negative' tax inspection report is issued and served upon the taxpayer, which formally notifies the taxpayer of the tax dispute.

In the Turkish tax system, disputes may be raised and resolved administratively before the authorities of the Revenue Administration and Ministry of Finance, or judicially before the first instance and regional tax courts and the Council of State.

i Administrative challenge and resolution of tax disputes

Errors in the calculation of the tax base and tax amount, and mistakes in the taxation of a person in an assessment of tax liability or as to the application of an exemption on the part of the tax authority, may be challenged by filing an application for reconsideration and correction with the local tax office. The local tax supervisor may accept or reject the application. If the application is accepted, a reconsideration order is issued for a refund to the taxpayer, which should be claimed within one year of its receipt by the taxpayer. If the application is rejected or the local tax authority fails to respond for 60 days, the interested party may file an administrative complaint with the Ministry of Finance requesting a reconsideration and correction. In the event of a rejection or silence for a period of 60 days, the interested party may initiate a lawsuit before the tax court for a refund.

Redundant payment of taxes and penalties caused by misleading circulars, or as a result of a tax offence committed due to a misinterpretation of the tax laws or a legal gap resulting from a difference of opinion between the tax authority and the case law, may be challenged by the taxpayer by filing an application for reconciliation within 30 days of receipt of a payment notice.

The taxpayer is precluded from concurrently filing a tax claim before the tax court until the reconciliation negotiations are exhausted without reaching a settlement. Provided that the reconciliation negotiations are closed, the taxpayer may file a claim before the tax court within 30 days in the event that the negotiations were held at a pre-assessment stage, or 15 days if held at a post-assessment stage, of receipt of the closing minutes of reconciliation.

The CTP provides that under certain conditions, a reduction may be made in the taxes and penalty assessed against a taxpayer if the taxpayer accepts and pays the amount without objection or litigation. The tax penalties that may be paid in reduced amounts are penalties for loss of tax, irregularity and special irregularity. To benefit from a reduction, the tax and penalty amounts must not be litigated. The request for reduction must be filed within the period allowed for litigation, and the reduced tax and penalty amounts must be paid on the due date or within three months. Regarding the penalty for non-payment of taxes, a reduction is made at a rate of one-half when it is assessed for the first time and at a rate of one-third when it is assessed for the second time. The rate reduction is one-third of the penalty for irregularity and special irregularity.

Persons acting in breach of the law may benefit from the regret and improvement provisions if they wish to compensate for their mistakes. Under Turkish tax law, a regret declaration is only possible for income, corporate, value added, special consumption, inheritance and transfer, and banking and insurance transaction taxes. To benefit from the regret provisions, the taxpayer must personally notify the competent authority of the situation before any denunciation or examination is made, submit any tax returns that have not been submitted, and pay the unpaid taxes together with the regret addition. In the event of such payment, no penalty for non-payment of taxes is assessed, and those who have committed a tax evasion offence under the CTP are not reported to the Office of the Public Prosecutor. However, a penalty for irregularity will be assessed for not submitting a tax return within the required period against taxpayers who have made a request under the regret provisions.

ii Judicial challenge and tax litigation

In cases where a complaint is rejected by authorities of the Ministry of Finance or a reconciliation negotiation has failed, the taxpayer may initiate court proceedings demanding a judgment for the annulment of the order, and actions related to determination, calculation and collection of taxes. Taxpayers may also choose to directly challenge an assessed tax amount and penalty by filing an action before the tax court to recover damages. An annulment action may also be filed concurrently with an action to recover damages. A complaint can only be filed subsequent to the service of payment notice if an assessment has already been made by the tax office. In the case of a dispute involving withholding taxes, the complaint can only be filed subsequent to effecting payment of the disputed tax amount with reservation. The time limitation to bring an action before the tax court is 30 days as from receipt of the payment notice or the actual date of payment. Taxpayers may prefer to challenge the tax after paying it, because even though a lawsuit has been filed, there will be accrual of default interest.

The CATP requires that a statement of claim shall contain the names, titles (if any) and addresses of all parties and representing counsel, cause of action, a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action and any supportive evidence, date of receipt of service, reference number and date of the payment notice, the disputed tax amount together with the category of tax, the related fiscal year and the tax identification number of the taxpayer. The court may, at its own discretion, strike out a complaint with leave to amend that is not filed in conformity with the form requirements of the CATP. The court may dismiss the complaint if the plaintiff fails to amend it within 30 days of receipt of service of the court's order to amend.

Upon filing of a statement of claim and conclusion by court that the statement of claim is in conformity with the form requirements, the statement of claim is served upon the defendant administration. Within 30 days of receipt of service of the statement of claim, the defendant administration may submit its defence. Within 30 days of the receipt of service of defence, the plaintiff may object to the administration's defence. The defendant administration then has 30 days from receipt of service of the plaintiff's objections to answer and submit its second defence.

The CATP provides that, in annulment actions and actions to recover damages with a value in excess of 28,000 Turkish liras,<sup>9</sup> upon written request of a party, a single hearing shall be held. The hearing shall be conducted after the closing of the pleadings. Upon closing of the pleadings and conclusion of the hearing, the court shall render its judgment. Due to the heavy caseload of the Turkish tax courts, the average conclusion of a case may take up to two years.

The Turkish rules of administrative trial procedure mandate ex officio investigation, under which a tax court is required to determine the issues of fact. Tax courts occasionally defer to expert testimony to determine an issue that involves a technical calculation.

Filing a complaint in principle stays collection procedures. If a court dismisses a case, collection procedures shall be resumed. The aggrieved party has the right to bring the matter before the regional administrative court and to appeal its decision before the Council of State. In that regard, judgments rendered by a tax court may be challenged by filing an objection before the competent authority within 30 days. An appeal may be taken from the judgment of regional administrative courts to the Council of State within 30 days. The regional administrative courts and the Council of State may affirm, reverse or modify the judgment of first instance trial courts. However, the regional administrative courts can reverse only decisions that were rendered just upon first instance court's initial review; in other cases, they further review claims to affirm the first instance court final decision or render a new decision, which can be appealed before the Council of State if the amount of claim is over then 100,000 Turkish liras. Perfecting of an appeal or review shall not stay enforcement of a judgment, and therefore a stay of enforcement order should be obtained from the reviewing court by securing a bond or without any security, depending on the court's discretion.

9 Article 17 of the CATP, applicable threshold as of 2014.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

The structure of tax courts in Turkey is as follows:

- a* local courts of first instance: provincial tax and administrative courts;
- b* regional and higher courts: regional administrative courts, and tax and administrative chambers; and
- c* Supreme Court: Council of State tax and administrative chambers, and general assemblies of tax and administrative litigation chambers.

Tax courts are specialty courts of first instance in the administrative adjudication system. Tax courts are established within the borders of a province to hear local disputes arising from an assessment or collection of tax, and from an act or omission in the interpretation or application of any law relating to a tax. A tax court tribunal is composed of three members: one presiding and two trial judges. Any one of the trial judges may be assigned as the trial coordination judge. An interested party may file a tax claim with the tax court in the event of failure of an objection, a tax reconciliation negotiation or a denial of tax reconsideration application by the local tax authority. A decision rendered by the tax courts may be challenged before the regional administrative court as of 20 July 2016, the date on which the regional administrative and civil courts started to operate. Decisions rendered by regional administrative courts regarding claims of over 100,000 Turkish liras may be appealed directly before the Council of State.

The Council of State is the last resort responsible for the appellate review of the judgments rendered by the regional administrative courts. The Council of State may affirm or reverse the judgment rendered by the tax court. When the judgment is reversed, the regional administrative courts may comply with the appellate order or insist on its judgment. When the regional administrative court insists on its judgment, the appellant may file a second appeal with the Council of State Tax Chambers Assembly. The judgment rendered by the Tax Chambers Assembly is final and binding upon the tax administrative court.

The time frame in which to bring a legal action is 60 days in the case of the Council of State, and 30 days in the case of the tax courts, unless a different period is stipulated in special laws (such as the seven-day period allowed with respect to payment orders and cautionary attachments). The period in which to bring a legal action starts to run on the date upon which the taxpayer is notified of the administrative act.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

Tax offences and penalties are stipulated in the CTP. The offending act and the applicable sanction are determined through administrative procedures. For an act to be determined by the tax administration as an offence, a penalty is assessed, again by the tax office, without the need for a court decision. In such offences, wilful intent is not required; negligence is considered to be sufficient.

Tax offences are acts or omissions causing tax loss, resulting in tax evasion or violating tax procedural rules ('irregularity' and 'special irregularity'). CTP anti-avoidance provisions regulate accounting and bookkeeping rules, and require strict compliance with the retention of proper documentation of transactions and legitimate maintenance of the statutory books. Compliance with the CTP anti-avoidance and tax procedure rules is rigorously enforced by the Tax Audit Board through tax inspections. Given the supremacy of the substance-over-form principle in the Turkish tax procedure, in the event of a discrepancy revealed during a tax inspection, evidentiary value of tax declarations and statutory books may be rebuttable by any form of evidence, except for administration of oath.

The CTP imposes penalties upon taxpayers for committing a tax offence. A tax penalty may be assessed by the local tax office at its discretion. Provided that the perpetrator of a tax offence voluntarily and before the initiation of a tax inspection turns him or herself in to the local tax authority, and makes full payment of the outstanding tax amount, the penalty for the tax offence shall be waived. The CTP also allows for reductions in the penalty amounts provided that a perpetrator agrees to make full payment against taxes and penalties within 30 days of receipt of the payment notice, or guarantees to make full payment by putting up a bond within three months of receipt of the payment notice.

The CTP provides that the failure of a taxpayer to make timely or full payment of its taxes shall cause a tax loss. It imposes a monetary penalty for this offence equal to the amount of the tax loss. In cases of fraudulent representation of accounts or illegitimate accounting procedures, the penalty is assessed at three times the amount of the tax loss.

The CTP defines 'irregularity' as non-compliance with tax laws with respect to 'form' and 'procedure'. Irregularities include non-compliance with timing or procedures of bookkeeping, and failing to obtain certification of the statutory books or to notify start of employment. The Council of Ministers assesses and announces the amounts of penalties for irregularity annually. The CTP imposes heavier penalties for committing certain offences defined as 'special irregularity'. These offences include:

- a* non-compliance with a request for information or document production;
- b* failure to issue or obtain an invoice or receipt;
- c* non-compliance with standards of preparing financial statements;
- d* lack of a tax identification number and abuse of necessary formalities; and
- e* violation of stamp tax obligations.

The Council of Ministers assesses and announces the amounts of penalties for special irregularity annually.

The CTP defines the offence of tax evasion as:

- a* fraudulent representations about financial records;
- b* misappropriating, hiding or falsifying books, accounts or records;
- c* illegitimate bookkeeping practices;
- d* destroying of books, accounts or records with the intention of obstructing justice; and
- e* engaging in out-of-book transactions, causing tax leakage.

Perpetrators of tax evasion may be subject to a monetary penalty in an amount of three times the tax loss, and, from a criminal perspective, imprisonment from 18 months up to three years. Non-compliance with document retention policies may subject violators to imprisonment for a period from three to five years.

There are three legal remedies available with respect to tax avoidance and penalties assessed by the tax office on the basis of an examination report: making a request for reduction, making a request for settlement and bringing a legal action.

If the amount of tax and penalties assessed is small, it is advisable to request a reduction or to seek a settlement, if there is a right to settlement. Both of these options, and the right to bring legal action, must be exercised within 30 days. If these rights are not used within the specified period, the taxes and penalties become final. Since there is no other remedy, the tax office will proceed to collect the taxes and penalties, together with delay interest and delay increases, even if only by means of attachment. Since, at the stage of collection, a cautionary lien would be imposed on the taxpayer's assets, it is advisable to bring the legal action within the required period.

V TAX CLAIMS

If the taxpayer believes that an excessive amount of tax has been paid, a legal action can be brought to recover the overpaid tax within 30 days of making the payment after submitting a tax return with a reservation.

Such cases will be tried in accordance with the CATP. The tax courts will also require claims to conform to the provisions of the CTP. According to legal practice, the tax authorities must calculate and pay interest in refunding amounts of taxes collected that are in excess, or are unjustly imposed upon taxpayers due to tax errors. If the amount of taxes collected, in excess or unjustly imposed, are due to an error on the part of the tax authorities, these monies will be refunded, together with interest from the date of the taxpayer's application.

Since the system of Turkish tax law is based on declaration, it is assumed that most of the information will come from the taxpayer, and tax examinations are carried out to cross-check the accuracy of the information declared by the taxpayer. If taxpayers have any objections and reservations under the law as to the official records made by the tax examination officers during tax examinations, they must be made in writing. A legal action may subsequently be brought on the basis of such objections and reservations. While using their power of discretion, tax examination officers must consider the tax laws and accounting techniques, and make their assessments on a legal basis. The Council of State refuses to accept conclusions reached by tax examination officers through superficial assessments during a tax examination. For example, in one laudable decision, the Council of State pointed to the necessity of the tax examination officer to use his or her power in an equitable manner: 'it is not equitable to reject the amounts of taxes deducted by the taxpayer without the tax examination officers conducting an examination and investigation of the amounts of VAT paid by him/her and determining their accuracy.'<sup>10</sup>

Making a determination based on assumptions and rendering an administrative decision is contrary not only to the rules of tax, but also to the Constitution. Given this possibility, it is natural that administrative decisions be subject to judicial review. In an annulment action, if it is considered that the legislative provision on which the administration concerned bases its decision is contrary to the Constitution, it may even be requested that the case be referred to the Constitutional Court for a constitutional review of said legislative provision. The tax court delays its decision until the Constitutional Court renders judgment on the issue. There is no requirement for the tax court to accept every request for application that is made to the Constitutional Court, but the judge of the tax court may refer the case to the Constitutional Court for review if it finds the reasons stated in the petition justified and plausible.

10 Assembly of the Tax Chambers of the Council of State Decision 1997/44 of 17 January 1997, Case No. 1995/50.

In the event that the requirements of the tax court decision are not carried out in due time, or at all, a legal action for damages may be brought to the administrative judiciary against the administration and the public officers concerned, and the obligation may arise for the administration to pay statutory delay interest due to such failure.

Taxation-related actions, as one specific kind of administrative decision, may be subjected to judicial review through two types of legal action: an action for annulment and an action for damages. An action for annulment enables an unlawful administrative act to be annulled by the court. An action for damages is brought by persons seeking compensation for violation of their subjective rights caused by an administrative act or decision, and the resulting loss. These persons may directly bring an action for damages to the administrative judiciary due to an administrative act that violates their rights, or bring an action for damages, and an action for annulment, concurrently.

Regarding the capacity to sue in the administrative judiciary, the interests or rights of the prospective claimant must have been violated. Those who fulfil this requirement are in general shown within the scope of the general taxation procedure legislation or specific tax laws, and may bring a legal action in the capacity of claimant. Natural or legal persons may be claimants before the tax courts, or may be represented by an attorney-at-law.

Apart from these, individual applications by interested parties to the Constitutional Court have recently been allowed under the Law regarding Constitutional Court and Judicial Review Procedures.<sup>11</sup> An interested party who alleges that its fundamental rights or freedoms recognised under the European Convention of Human Rights and the 1982 Constitution have been impaired may obtain an order as to the validity of a regulation by bringing an action for a declaratory relief in the Constitutional Court. This may enable the taxpayer and may order the tax court to reinitiate and retrial the tax claims. An individual application to the Constitutional Court is domestically the last resort, and therefore may be filed after all other available remedies for domestic review are exhausted by the interested party. Similarly, individual applications by interested parties to the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) have been allowed since 28 January 1987, and the jurisdiction of the ECHR has been recognised as binding for Turkish Republic territory since 22 January 1990. Accordingly, a declaratory judgment rendered by the ECHR and an order for recovery of damages by the aggrieved party shall be conclusive and binding upon the Turkish public authorities, which may be required to retrial tax cases. An individual application to the ECHR is the last resort, and may only be filed after all domestically available remedies for review are exhausted by the interested party.

VI COSTS

Filing a complaint requesting an annulment is subject to a flat fee. For 2016, the filing fee and costs for serving a complaint were below 250 Turkish liras. In addition, a fixed fee ranging from 1,000 to 1,500 Turkish liras is paid for the legal counsel of the losing party. The filing fees and minimum fees and costs for legal counsel are announced annually. Attorneys' fees paid under separate engagement terms cannot be recovered from the administration. Filing of any other pleadings or administrative applications is not subject to any fee.

11 Law No. 6216, announced in the Official Gazette dated 3 April 2011 with issue No. 27894.

Filing a complaint to recover damages shall be subject to a proportionate fee, and if damages are granted, the fee is payable pro rata by the parties based on the attribution of fault. The proportional fee is calculated at a rate of 68.31 per 1,000 of the amount accepted by court, and one quarter of this is collected in advance according to the amount declared and claimed by the plaintiff upon filing with the tax courts.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Disputes that relate to taxation and administrative regulations regarding the same in general refer to the directly applicable rules concerning the sovereignty of the Turkish Republic. In that regard, it cannot be discussed before a alternative dispute resolution mechanism other than set forth and regulated through administrative proceedings.

Applying for settlement or reconciliation is an alternative method of dispute resolution for redundant payment of taxes and penalties caused by misleading circulars, or as a result of a tax offence committed due to a misinterpretation of the tax laws or a legal gap resulting from a difference of opinion between the tax authority and the case law. An application for reconciliation should be made within 30 days of receipt of a payment notice. The taxpayer is precluded from concurrently filing a tax claim before the tax court until the reconciliation negotiations are exhausted without reaching a settlement. Provided that the reconciliation negotiations are closed, the taxpayer may file a claim before the tax court within 30 days in the event that the negotiations were held at a pre-assessment stage, or 15 days if held at a post-assessment stage, of receipt of the closing minutes of reconciliation.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Turkish tax procedural law does not recognise the concept of 'permissible avoidance'. Any act or omission with the purpose of avoiding taxes and thereby causing a tax loss is considered a tax offence and may subject the perpetrator to a penalty. The purpose of anti-avoidance provisions in the Turkish tax laws is to prevent a potential tax leakage through various measures, such as imposing withholding taxes, strict rules for legitimate bookkeeping procedures, documentation of commercial transactions, and electronic invoicing and electronic filing of declarations.

A common practice to avoid taxes in Turkey is to change the applied method for allocation of extraordinary and technical depreciation.<sup>12</sup> Selection of the method of calculation of periodic depreciation costs may have important financial consequences in that it might affect the profit or loss calculation for the period in question. Given the fact that in direct taxes, tax assessment is based on the declared profit or loss, the calculation method for depreciation used by the taxpayer may ultimately affect the amount of income or corporation tax payable.

12 Extraordinary economic and technical depreciation is applicable for moveable and fixed property and rights that lose value completely or partially due to disasters, such as fire, earthquakes or flooding; become completely or partially unusable in terms of technical yield or value due to new inventions; and are subject to increased wear or corrosion outside normal limits as they have been used extensively. Extraordinary depreciation is applicable only with the permission of the related ministries upon the application of the taxpayer, and the procedure for each enterprise will be identified separately by the Ministry of Finance.

Transfer pricing rules are applicable for the sale or purchase of goods and services between related (foreign or domestic) companies, and they are set forth in line with the OECD transfer pricing rules. Violation would bring additional corporate and withholding taxes. This capitalisation rules become applicable when the debt-to-equity ratio is exceeded due to loans from shareholders or related parties, and this would bring additional withholding taxes. Similarly, income and corporate tax legislation aims to prevent tax avoidance with respect to profits and income of foreign companies directly or indirectly controlled by a Turkish company by having 50 per cent of the share capital, dividends or voting power. Tax authorities rely upon the substance-over-form principle, and may accordingly disregard the form of a transaction on the grounds of a tax avoidance attempt by a taxpayer in light of the value added tax related legislations. The purpose here is to carry out and assess all transactions between domestic and foreign related parties on an arm's-length basis, and to have properly documented and reported income and profits.

The impact of changing the depreciation calculation method for a given fiscal period may also cause problems in comparing financial statements that were prepared by applying different calculation methods. The Ministry of Finance should refrain from allowing requests for changing the calculation method for depreciation allocation, and require demonstration of good cause for granting such requests. In addition, aggressive implementation of the exemptions and exceptions allowed under the tax laws may be considered a violation of the anti-avoidance rules.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES (DTTs)

Turkey has signed DTTs with 80 countries that allow for the taxes paid in any one of the member countries to be discounted from accrued tax payment in the others, thus preventing duplicate payment of taxes.<sup>13</sup>

The scope of the DTTs may cover a variety of sources of income, including commercial earnings, international transportation earnings, capital gains, salary and compensation, and most notably dividends, interest payments and royalties. DTTs may require various conditions for the application of advantageous withholding tax rates, such as a recipient being required to be the beneficial owner of the acquired gain, or that the recipient shall directly own at least 10 per cent of the share capital of the company distributing dividends. In the event of a dispute, the tax court will evaluate the provisions of the applicable DTT, and determine whether the case in question satisfies the necessary conditions for a given tax exemption or exception under the treaty as if it is a domestic law in Turkey.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Currently, the main areas of focus of the Turkish tax authorities include ensuring compliance with transfer pricing, thin capitalisation, VAT implications, controlled foreign company rules, stamp tax liability, and the most recent implementation of an amnesty and restructuring of receivables law.

Transfer pricing and thin capitalisation, as well as deduction of the VAT paid with respect to these non-deductible costs and transactions from the corporate income tax base, are still among the most notorious Turkish anti-avoidance rules. Controlled foreign company-related issues are at the same controversial point and are reviewed by the tax authorities diligently. Stamp tax is a tax levied upon the signatories of any document signed, initiated or marked that may be presented for proof of an issue of fact and that involves a monetary consideration. Any paper, including a contract, letter of undertaking, deed of settlement, payroll records and receipts may be subject to stamp tax. Stamp tax is calculated based on the highest lump-sum amount of each independent transaction agreed in a document. In the event that a lump-sum amount is not expressly stated in a given document but a monetary figure can be calculated, the stamp tax shall be applied to the calculated amount. The nature of such taxation, being document-based, is considered archaic and contrary to the ordinary course of commercial life, and the nature of taxation is causing people to refrain from meeting the requirement of registering and documenting their business activities.

The construction sector is currently deemed one of the leading sectors for economic development, and taxes for immovable property transactions are accordingly in the foreground. Value added tax rates to be calculated for the supply of luxury housing or first-class construction on the date that a building licence is issued frequently differ, and are implemented differently to keep the sector buoyant. For example, as of 7 September 2016, as per provisional Article 2 of Council of Ministers Decree No. 2007/13033 on Determination of Value Added Tax Rates to be implemented to Goods and Services, this rate would be implemented at a reduced rate of 8 per cent until 31 March 2017, as the same rate is applicable for houses with square metre unit tax values of over 500 Turkish liras but less than 1,000 Turkish liras. In the case of social housing of less than 150 square metres, a 1 per cent VAT rate applies.

Finally, settlements, payments and amnesties as per Law No. 6736 on Restructuring Some of the Public Receivables<sup>14</sup> have just started to be implemented, and disputes and challenges regarding these may take place in the near future.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

The complexity of the taxation system in Turkey creates difficulties in following up developments in the legislation both for administrative institutions and for the taxpayer, which may lead to erroneous practices. Unless legislative provisions that are clear and not open to interpretation are in place, it is probable that taxpayers will encounter a variety of disputes. For this reason, company managers are advised to maintain commercial ledgers and records under the supervision of an expert financial adviser, and retain an expert lawyer in the field of tax litigation to handle any taxation disputes. In company mergers, and in the purchase of company stock, it is important to evaluate the current and potential taxation risks, and to be aware of any ongoing taxation lawsuits. We recommend regular cooperation with professionals, especially accountants, and tax lawyers and consultants, to be prepared before taking any action. In the event of doubt, taxpayers are strongly recommended to request a special communiqué from the tax authority to clarify a given tax issue, which would eliminate the risk of penalties.

I INTRODUCTION

Resolving tax disputes is complicated under the UK system. The enquiry process gives a great deal of control to Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs (HMRC or Revenue) regarding the conduct of a dispute, and can limit the ability of a taxpayer to bring matters to a tribunal within the timetable they might wish. The remedies available in the Tax Tribunal can be limited and its jurisdiction restricted. In consequence, a variety of fora and causes of action may be available to address tax issues, and an early issue that will often arise is whether the taxpayer has chosen the wrong forum or action. The system has recently been further complicated by developments including the extension of HMRC's information-gathering powers, and the introduction of accelerated payment notices, follower notices and partner payment notices. These are discussed further below.

Tax disputes may also be resolved in a non-contentious manner. In 2012, HMRC published a commentary on its litigation and settlement strategy (LSS), LSS guidance, and guidance on the use of alternative dispute resolution (ADR) in large and complex cases.<sup>2</sup> The LSS sets out the framework within which HMRC seeks to resolve tax disputes through litigation or ADR. The aim behind the LSS and updated guidance is to provide a mechanism to settle disputes in a non-confrontational and collaborative way. However, in practice,

The LSS is at Annex 1 to the commentary. HMRC's information page for taxpayers is at www.gov.uk/tax-dispute-s-alternative-dispute-resolution-adr.

HMRC's often litigious and uncompromising approach to disputes, especially in cases where the revenue exposure is high, means that a large number of tax disputes are still brought to the courts and tribunals.

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

i Corporation tax

The usual way in which a tax dispute arises, in the context of corporation tax, is with the filing of a tax return. A company is required to provide a self-assessment of its corporate tax liability on delivering a tax return.<sup>3</sup> Most claims for relief must be made in the tax return, although it may be possible to claim for a relief, allowance or repayment separately within specified time periods.<sup>4</sup>

Commonly, returns must be filed within 12 months of the end of the accounting period for which the return is made.<sup>5</sup> Companies must file their returns, accounts, computations and any claims for relief via HMRC's online corporation tax service<sup>6</sup> save for under exceptional circumstances.<sup>7</sup> A company may also, by notice to HMRC within 12 months of the filing date, amend its own return.<sup>8</sup>

HMRC has a period of 12 months from the date the return was delivered to issue a notice of enquiry, with provisions to deal with returns that are filed late.<sup>9</sup> An enquiry may relate to anything that is contained in (or required to be contained in) the self-assessment return, such as questions regarding any claim or election, or any amount that might affect the tax liability of the company or another company, in that accounting period or another accounting period.<sup>10</sup> HMRC can make only one enquiry into each tax return, unless the

3 The corporation tax self-assessment rules are set out in Schedule 18, Paragraphs 1–20 of the Finance Act (FA) 1998, as variously amended. The self-assessment regime applies to accounting periods ending on or after 1 July 1999.

4 Section 42, Taxes Management Act (TMA) 1970; Schedule 39, Paragraphs 37–65, FA 2008 reduced the normal time limit for claims and elections; from 1 April 2010, the time limit is four years from the end of the accounting period to which they relate, unless a different time limit is prescribed within the legislation for that particular claim or election. Previously, the time limit was six years. Claims with regard to group relief, capital allowances, research and development tax credits, film tax relief, land remediation tax credits and vaccine research tax credits must also be made in the company's tax return. If an error or mistake has been made in a claim and subsequently discovered, the claimant may make a supplementary claim within the time allowed for making the original claim.

5 Schedule 18, Paragraph 14, FA 1998, subject to specific exceptions for companies that prepare commercial accounts for a period longer than 18 months. A return must also be filed within three months from the date on which the notice requiring the return was served.

6 HMRC's online corporation tax service is accessible at www.gov.uk/file-your-company-accounts-and-tax-return.

9 Schedule 18, Paragraph 24, FA 1998.

company has made subsequent amendments to the return.<sup>11</sup> If HMRC is otherwise out of time to issue a notice of enquiry into the original return, the scope of enquiry is limited to the amended content.<sup>12</sup> The scope of enquiry would also be restricted if the amendment giving rise to the enquiry consisted of the making or withdrawing of a claim for group relief.<sup>13</sup>

There is no maximum duration set for an enquiry, and HMRC is entitled to maintain an enquiry as long as it still reasonably requires information relevant to the company's tax position. Subject to the options discussed below, generally the taxpayer must await the conclusion of the enquiry before it can take any steps to commence litigation. At present, HMRC may only issue a closure notice once it has reached a conclusion on all areas of dispute within an enquiry.<sup>14</sup> The Court of Appeal held that an enquiry is completed once an officer of Revenue and Customs informs by notice the company that they have completed their enquiry and state their conclusions.<sup>15</sup> The notice only takes effect once issued. HMRC must carry out the following steps to validly issue a closure notice: decide whether to complete its enquiry; establish whether amendments need to be made to the self-assessment return and, if so, what they should be; and communicate the completion of the enquiry and the conclusions to the taxpayer.

Once a closure notice has been issued, HMRC cannot unilaterally withdraw it.<sup>16</sup>

In December 2014, HMRC published a consultation paper on a proposal giving HMRC a unilateral power to refer matters to the Tribunal with a view to achieving early resolution of one or more aspects of an enquiry.<sup>17</sup> HMRC's aim was to codify this in the Finance Bill 2016. In September 2015, a summary of responses was published, in which two principal concerns were expressed: first, that any partial closure should not rest exclusively with HMRC; and secondly, that the safeguards regarding the use of the power should be more comprehensive and explicit.<sup>18</sup> It is therefore likely that the legislative change will be deferred until the Finance Bill 2017.

If the taxpayer believes HMRC is unduly extending the enquiry, it can apply to the First-tier Tribunal for a direction that HMRC give a closure notice within a specified period and have the enquiry closed.<sup>19</sup> The Tribunal will give the direction unless it is satisfied that HMRC has reasonable grounds for not giving notice within the specified period.<sup>20</sup> The powers of the First-tier Tribunal in determining an application for a closure notice are quite broad, and in some circumstances can be used as a mechanism to determine substantive legal issues in dispute and, if necessary, make a reference to the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) for a preliminary ruling on EU law.<sup>21</sup> Enquiries should not be used as a method of obtaining information as to a third party's tax affairs.<sup>22</sup> Alternatively, a taxpayer who believes that HMRC's actions have resulted in an unacceptable delay to the enquiry process may submit a complaint to HMRC.<sup>23</sup>

Any question arising in connection with the subject matter of the enquiry while it is in progress may be referred to the First-tier Tribunal for determination while the enquiry continues, but only by agreement.<sup>24</sup> Written notice of referral specifying the questions being referred must be given to the Tribunal jointly by HMRC and the company.

Once a closure notice has been issued, HMRC will have no power to amend the tax return other than to enforce the conclusions stated in the notice.<sup>25</sup> However, if at the conclusion of an enquiry HMRC remains of the view that the original return is incorrect, it will issue a closure notice requiring the return to be amended.<sup>26</sup> This notice can be appealed against, and this is the most common way in which tax disputes proceed to litigation.

Once the time limit for an enquiry has passed, or an enquiry has been closed, the only way in which HMRC can examine a chargeable period is through the discovery process.<sup>27</sup> HMRC may issue a discovery assessment:<sup>28</sup> when it becomes aware of the non-assessment of income or gains that ought to have been assessed; if an assessment is or has become insufficient; or if a relief given is or has become excessive.<sup>29</sup>

If the taxpayer has submitted a tax return, HMRC's power is restricted by two conditions. First, a discovery assessment may only be made where the return was not made in accordance with 'practice generally prevailing'.<sup>30</sup> Secondly, either the understatement must have been careless or deliberate,<sup>31</sup> or HMRC could not reasonably be expected to be aware of the understatement based on the information made available to it by the taxpayer at 24 Schedule 18, Paragraphs 31A–31D, FA 1998, as inserted by Schedule 29, Paragraph 7, FA 2001. The Tribunal's determination is binding on the parties as if it were a decision on a preliminary issue in an appeal, and must be taken into account by HMRC in reaching its conclusions on the enquiry.

25 Schedule 18, Paragraph 34(2)(b), FA 1998.

26 Schedule 18, Paragraph 34, FA 1998.

27 Or, in unusual circumstances of 'jeopardy', Schedule 18, Paragraph 30, FA 1998. This power is rarely used, and only in circumstances where HMRC believes the amount of tax stated as payable in the self-assessment is insufficient and there is likely to be a loss of tax to the Crown. The power may be exercised after notice of an enquiry has been given but before the enquiry is completed.

28 Schedule 18, Paragraphs 41–44, FA 1998. The tax so assessed will be in addition to the tax charged under the self-assessment; see also Section 29, TMA 1970.

the relevant time.<sup>32</sup> Similarly, if HMRC discovers that a return for an accounting period incorrectly states an amount that affects, or may affect, the tax payable for another accounting period or by another company, they may make a 'discovery determination' of the amount of tax due by the company based on the information available to the officer.<sup>33</sup>

A taxpayer who disagrees with a closure notice, an assessment or other decision made by HMRC can appeal against it by giving notice in writing to HMRC, stating the grounds of appeal.<sup>34</sup> The notice must normally be given within 30 days after the date of issue of the assessment or decision, although late appeals can be made in some circumstances.

Once a taxpayer has appealed there are three main options: a different HMRC officer can carry out a review of the decision; the taxpayer may ask the Tribunal to decide the matter in dispute; or the appeal can be settled by agreement at any time.

Reviews are not compulsory and, where HMRC carries out a review but the taxpayer still disagrees with the decision, the taxpayer can ask the Tribunal to decide the issue or continue negotiations with HMRC to settle the appeal by agreement.

ii Disclosure

During the course of an enquiry, HMRC may request that the taxpayer provide information and documents that are in that taxpayer's possession or power and that are relevant to its own tax position. If HMRC issues an information notice,<sup>35</sup> the taxpayer must produce the information within such time, by such means and in such format as provided for in the notice.<sup>36</sup> In relation to corporation tax enquiries, while the enquiry remains in progress, a company is entitled to amend its return, and to make or withdraw claims for group relief.<sup>37</sup>

Unless the issue of the notice to provide information has received prior approval from the Tribunal,<sup>38</sup> there is a right of appeal against it.<sup>39</sup> However, this appeal does not extend to

34 Schedule 18, Paragraph 48, FA 1998.

35 Schedule 36, Paragraph 1, FA 2008. Copies of documents can be produced unless the notice stipulates that originals must be submitted. A taxpayer that fails to comply with a notice may be liable to pay penalties.

36 Schedule 36, Paragraph 7, FA 2008.

37 Schedule 18, Paragraph 74, FA 1998. Group relief claims may be made or withdrawn at any time up to the latest of (1) the first anniversary of the filing date for the claimant's company tax return; (2) 30 days after closure of any enquiry into that return (unless the enquiry, being otherwise out of time, was limited to matters to which a previous amendment making or withdrawing a group relief claim relates or that are affected by the amendment); (3) 30 days after notice of any amendment of that return by HMRC following such an enquiry; and (4) 30 days after determination of any appeal against an amendment within (3), or at a later time if HMRC allows it. These time limits override the normal time limits for amendment of a company tax return. Withdrawals of claims must be made by amending the return, and a claim can only be amended by withdrawal and replacement by another claim.

any information or documents that form part of a taxpayer's statutory records.<sup>40</sup> An appeal must be made to HMRC, in writing and specifying the grounds of appeal, within 30 days of receipt of the notice.<sup>41</sup> If a taxpayer fails to make an appeal within the normal time limit, an appeal can still be made if HMRC agrees,<sup>42</sup> or where HMRC does not agree, if the Tribunal gives permission.

Schedule 23 to the FA 2011 introduced and extended a common set of information-gathering and inspection powers for HMRC covering income tax, capital gains tax, corporation tax and VAT; these are also known as HMRC's 'bulk and specialist information powers'. HMRC may, by written notice (also known as a data-holder notice), require a 'relevant data-holder'<sup>43</sup> to provide 'relevant data'.<sup>44</sup> The objective behind these provisions is to improve HMRC's data-gathering processes to ensure that interventions are better targeted 40 Any entity that may be required to deliver a tax return is required to keep and preserve all records and documents that may be required to deliver a correct and complete return for an accounting period (e.g., invoices, receipts, expenses claims). These are the company's statutory records, which must be retained for six years after the end of the period to which the tax return relates or, with effect from 1 April 2009, for such shorter periods as may be specified in writing by HMRC; see Schedule 18, Paragraph 21, FA 1998, as amended.

41 Schedule 36, Paragraph 32, FA 2008.

42 HMRC must agree to a written request for a late appeal if it is satisfied that there was a reasonable excuse for not making the appeal within the time limit, and that the request was made without unreasonable delay after the reasonable excuse ceased.

43 Relevant data-holders include employers, employment agencies, payroll agents, deemed employers, banks and building societies, trustees, nominees, personal representatives, solicitors, agents (including insurance, patent and copyright agents), companies, stockbrokers, public bodies, the land registry, landlords, tenants, intermediaries, clearing houses, persons involved in the registration and administration of securities transactions, settlors, beneficiaries and merchant acquirers who process credit and debit card payments; see Paragraphs 8–27 of Schedule 23, FA 2011. Section 176, FA 2016 extends relevant data-holders to include providers of electronic stored value payments services that operate 'digital wallets' and business intermediaries who facilitate transactions online. The categories broadly mirror those previously found in TMA 1970 but create some new ones, including charities and property managing agents. A person is still a data-holder if he or she previously fell within one of the categories of data-holder but no longer does so.

44 The Data-gathering Powers (Relevant Data) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/847) came into force on 1 April 2012. They set out the information that data-holders must provide to HMRC on receipt of a data-holder notice. The Data-gathering Powers (Relevant Data) (Amendment) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/1811), which came into force on 1 September 2013, set out the position in relation to merchant acquirer data-holders, and similar bodies. This includes information relating to employment-related payments, certain interest payments, payments derived from securities, rent and other payments arising from land, dealings in oil licences and payment transactions. The Data-gathering Powers (Relevant Data) (Amendment) Regulations 2016 (SI 2016/979), which came into force on 1 November 2016, specify the data required by HMRC from two new categories of relevant data-holder: namely, electronic stored-value payment service providers and business intermediaries, as introduced by the FA.

against those who underpay tax;<sup>45</sup> for this reason, a data-holder notice must not be used to obtain information about the data-holder's own tax position.<sup>46</sup> The data requested may be general data, or data specific to a particular person or matter including personal data.<sup>47</sup> The type of information must be specified in the notice.

If Tribunal approval is not obtained for the issue of a Schedule 23 data-holder notice, the data-holder may appeal a notice on any of the following grounds: it would be unduly onerous to comply with the notice, the data-holder is not a relevant data-holder or the data specified in the notice are not relevant data.<sup>48</sup>

There are four options for proceeding with an appeal:

- a* the appellant can require HMRC to review the matter in question;
- b* HMRC can offer to review the matter in question;
- c* the appellant can notify the appeal to the First-tier Tribunal for it to decide the matter in question; or
- d* the appeal can be settled by agreement between HMRC and the appellant.

Where the appellant requires HMRC to conduct a review, he or she can still appeal to the Tribunal if he or she disagrees with the review's conclusions, or if HMRC fails to complete a review within the required time.<sup>49</sup>

In some circumstances, a data-holder may also be a 'data controller' under Section 1(1) of the DPA. There is therefore a potential overlap between Schedule 23, FA 2011 and the DPA; it remains to be seen whether and to what extent a request that a data-holder provide 'personal data' under Schedule 23, FA 2011 and Section 176, FA 2016 can be interpreted consistently with a data controller's obligations in relation to the same 'personal data' under the DPA.

49 In direct tax cases, the taxpayer can request a review of a matter at any time after it has notified HMRC of the appeal (however, not once the Tribunal has been notified). HMRC has 30 days, or a longer period if reasonable, to give its view of the matter. From the day the Revenue gives notice of its view, it has 45 days to carry out the review and give notice of its conclusions. By agreement, the 45-day period can be varied (Sections 49B and 49E, TMA 1970).

iv VAT

For VAT, the onus is on the taxable person (i.e., the person registered for VAT) to file returns accounting for the VAT charged on and suffered in respect of any goods and services he or she supplies.<sup>51</sup> In circumstances where HMRC disagrees with the content of a VAT return (or where the return has not been filed on time), it may issue an assessment to tax in respect of any VAT it considers owing.<sup>52</sup> HMRC may also issue a default surcharge<sup>53</sup> where a registered person has not filed his or her VAT return on time, or an inaccuracy penalty<sup>54</sup> where it considers that a VAT return contains inaccurate information. Normally, HMRC will write to the taxable person in advance of issuing an assessment to highlight its concerns and provide an opportunity for that person to make representations to resolve the matter. In circumstances where the taxable person has sought a credit or refund of VAT,<sup>55</sup> HMRC may either agree to the adjustment or issue a decision rejecting all (or some) of the amendment sought.

If the taxable person disagrees with all or part of an assessment or decision issued or made against him or her, he or she must appeal to HMRC within 30 days of the date on which the assessment or decision was issued or made. The taxable person may then either request an internal review (or accept an offer of one, if made) by HMRC, or notify his or her appeal to the First-tier Tribunal (Tax). If a review is requested, and the taxable person disagrees with the outcome of that review, he or she may still issue an appeal to the First-tier Tribunal (Tax), provided he or she does so within 30 days of the date of that review decision.

Where there are issues of public law, it may be necessary to seek redress by way of judicial review.

v Stamp duty land tax

HMRC may investigate a land transaction return provided that it notifies the purchaser of its intention to do so within nine months of the filing date. The filing date is 30 days after the effective date of the transaction. Once the nine-month period ends, HMRC can still make a discovery assessment if the underpaid tax was caused by a deliberate or careless action by the taxpayer, or if the taxpayer did not provide sufficient information at the date of filing for HMRC to know that the tax was underpaid.

For periods before this, the previous regime of misdeclaration penalties applies; see Sections 63–64, VATA.

vi Ruling procedures

Taxpayers can request guidance as to HMRC's interpretation of tax law, and may also request a formal ruling from HMRC on specific facts and transactions, where appropriate. The Taxes Acts provide that advance clearance or approval may be given by HMRC, but only for certain types of transaction (e.g., clearance for a company purchase of its own shares).<sup>56</sup>

HMRC will give a post-transaction ruling where there is doubt about the tax consequences of a transaction that has been carried out. The application must be made to the tax office dealing with the taxpayer's affairs.<sup>57</sup>

Such a ruling is binding on HMRC provided all relevant information is supplied for the particular transaction concerned and in respect of the particular taxpayer. This applies even if there is a subsequent court decision. There is no appeal against a ruling as such, except where rights to appeal are set out in statute. The taxpayer is not, however, bound to follow it in completing its return. If HMRC does not accept the return, the issue can then be the subject of an appeal.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

i Internal review process

A taxpayer generally has 30 days to appeal against an HMRC decision by way of notice of appeal. The taxpayer may, however, also request a review of the decision. In VAT cases, HMRC is obliged to offer a review of the matter, and seeking a review will delay the period for seeking an appeal until 30 days after the review decision. In direct tax cases, the taxpayer can request, or HMRC can offer, a review of the matter,<sup>58</sup> but only after HMRC has been notified by the taxpayer of the appeal.

An officer who has not previously been involved with the decision will carry out the internal review process; his or her aim is to provide a balanced and objective view.<sup>59</sup> If HMRC offers a review, the taxpayer then has 30 days to accept HMRC's offer<sup>60</sup> or, if he or she does not wish to accept the offer of a review, to notify the appeal to the Tribunal.<sup>61</sup> If the taxpayer accepts HMRC's offer, HMRC has 45 days to complete the internal review procedure and notify the taxpayer of its conclusions, unless varied by agreement.<sup>62</sup> The taxpayer then has

30 days to notify the appeal to the Tax Tribunal.<sup>63</sup> The taxpayer will require leave to appeal from the tax Tribunal once the 30 days have passed.<sup>64</sup> The matter will be considered settled in HMRC's favour if the taxpayer neither declines nor accepts HMRC's offer, nor notifies the Tribunal in time.<sup>65</sup>

ii Complaints

HMRC published 'Your Charter' in February 2013.<sup>66</sup> The Charter outlines nine rights that taxpayers can expect from HMRC. These are the rights:

- a* to be respected;
- b* to have help and support to get things right;
- c* to be treated as honest;
- d* to be treated even-handedly;
- e* to be professional and act with integrity;
- f* to tackle people who deliberately break the rules and challenge those who bend the rules;
- g* to protect the taxpayer's information and respect their privacy;
- h* to accept that someone else may represent the taxpayer; and
- i* to do all it can to keep down the costs of dealing with HMRC.

A taxpayer may submit a complaint to HMRC in circumstances where it believes that HMRC has failed to uphold one or more of these rights.<sup>67</sup> The taxpayer should submit as much information as possible in order for HMRC to investigate the complaint.

After receiving the complaint, HMRC will try to resolve the issue as quickly as possible. Possible remedies may include an apology, payment for worry or distress or reasonable costs (these may include professional fees). If the taxpayer is unhappy with the decision, he or she may request that it is referred for consideration to a different HMRC complaints adviser. Following the second HMRC decision, the taxpayer may request a referral to the Adjudicator's Office. The Adjudicator will act as a fair and unbiased referee in the matter. If the taxpayer is unsatisfied with the Adjudicator's decision, he or she may request their MP to refer the complaint to the Parliamentary and Health Service Ombudsman. This may be a lengthy process, depending upon the particular facts and the willingness of either side to reach an agreement, and taxpayers should continue to pay any tax due pending the resolution of the complaint. It remains to be seen how successfully and quickly the complaints process will operate in practice.

iii Courts and tribunals

The first instance tribunal for most tax disputes is the Tax Chamber of the First-tier Tribunal. It sits as a tribunal of one to three tribunal judges, depending on the issue's complexity.

67 HMRC, 'Guidance – Complain to HM Revenue and Customs' at www.gov.uk/complain-to-hm-revenue-and-customs.

Appeals from decisions of the First-tier Tribunal are to the Tax and Chancery Chamber of the Upper Tribunal by leave only on questions of law. The Upper Tribunal can also determine cases transferred from the First-tier Tribunal and judicial reviews of the tax functions of HMRC,<sup>68</sup> and can hear cases at first instance (i.e., bypassing the First-tier Tribunal), but only if such cases meet the category of ‘complex’ and the Upper Tribunal and both parties consent.<sup>69</sup> The Upper Tribunal also sits as a tribunal of one to three judges, one of whom must be a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court. Both bodies are independent of HMRC. There are no set parameters for the time period for determining cases, but a case requiring a hearing of less than a week should be capable of being heard by either tribunal within a year.

Appeals from the Upper Tribunal are to the Court of Appeal (which sits as three judges), then to the Supreme Court, again only with permission and (except in extreme cases) only on questions of law. Appeals to the Supreme Court will not be granted permission unless the matter is of general public importance. It sits as a panel of an uneven number of no less than three (but usually either five or seven) judges. The judges are independent of HMRC. Periods for hearings in the higher courts naturally tend to be longer. We would usually expect cases to take around 18 months to complete in the Court of Appeal, and two years in the Supreme Court.

Certain types of claim, as discussed below, must be brought in the High Court (either in the Chancery Division or the Administrative Court) rather than via the tribunal system. As an appellate body created by statute, the First-tier Tribunal has no general supervisory jurisdiction; claims concerning public law matters are therefore best brought by way of an application for judicial review in the High Court.<sup>70</sup> Cases in the High Court should not take much longer than those in the First-tier Tribunal, and in the area of judicial review tend to be quicker. Appeals from the High Court lie by permission to the Court of Appeal and then the Supreme Court.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

The UK applies a consolidated tax penalty regime that distinguishes between two main categories of penalties. It should be noted that different rules apply to accounting periods predating 1 April 2009.

Revenue and Customs Commissioners* [2013] UKUT 71 (TCC), [2013] STC 998, concerning a taxpayer’s VAT appeal based on the public law concept of ‘legitimate expectations’. See also Hok Ltd v. Revenue and Customs Commissioners [2012] UKUT 363 (TCC), [2013] STC 225.

The first type of penalty applies to the failure to make returns<sup>71</sup> and to pay tax.<sup>72</sup> These penalties take the form of an immediate penalty upon default, with incremental additional penalties depending on how late the tax is paid or the return submitted.<sup>73</sup> Penalties for failure to file a return or to pay tax will not be imposed where the taxpayer has a reasonable excuse.

The second type of penalty applies to errors in returns,<sup>74</sup> failure to give notice of chargeability to tax or unauthorised issue of VAT invoices.<sup>75</sup> These penalties operate on a sliding scale depending on the degree of culpability, and are quantified as a percentage of the lost revenue.

In relation to penalties for errors, degrees of culpability are categorised as ‘careless’, ‘deliberate but not concealed’ or ‘deliberate and concealed’<sup>76</sup>. Errors that are neither careless nor deliberate attract no penalty unless the person making the return later becomes aware of the error and fails to disclose it to HMRC, in which case it is treated as careless. The amount of a penalty ranges from 30 per cent of the lost revenue for careless defaults to 200 per cent in the most serious cases of deliberate and concealed action. Penalties can be reduced (and in the case of careless actions cancelled) if the person making the return discloses the error to HMRC. The amount of any reduction depends also on whether the disclosure was made following prompting by HMRC or was unprompted.

A similar system applies to penalties for failure to give notice of chargeability to tax or the unauthorised issue of VAT invoices, save that the ‘careless’ category is omitted. Instead, there is a catch-all category for cases where the failure was not deliberate. Again, the amount of the penalty ranges from 30 per cent of the lost revenue for actions that were not deliberate to 200 per cent for the most serious cases of deliberate and concealed actions involving offshore aspects.

As a further deterrent, HMRC may in certain circumstances, and where the potential lost revenue exceeds £25,000, publish the details of deliberate tax defaulters.<sup>77</sup> This power applies to tax periods commencing on or after 1 April 2010, and to offences committed on or after that date. In cases of serious fraud, HMRC has the power to launch criminal investigations that can lead to criminal sanctions if convictions are secured. Such an approach is only appropriate in the most serious cases.

The Finance Bill 2016 has made certain amendments to support the strategy to tackle offshore tax evasion. These amendments will help identify those that hide behind companies and trusts when committing offshore tax evasion and restrict the protection from naming those offshore evaders who do not come forward to HMRC unprompted.<sup>78</sup>

i Recovering overpaid tax

Tax may be overpaid because of an innocent error in a return or, more commonly, because a decision of the courts indicates that the previously accepted tax treatment was wrong. In recent years, this has arisen most prominently where a decision of the CJEU has held that tax otherwise due under the terms of domestic legislation was in fact raised incompatibly with EU rights, and that the tax levy was therefore not due.<sup>79</sup> A similar circumstance will arise where the tax is found to be incompatible with an enforceable double taxation treaty. In those circumstances, the analysis would be that the terms of the double taxation treaty overrode the incompatible domestic legislation, so that the tax paid in accordance with that legislation was in fact paid under a mistake in respect of what the law actually required.<sup>80</sup>

In those circumstances, the most immediately obvious remedy would be to amend the tax return to reflect the tax actually owing consistent with a proper understanding of the position. Where this route is not possible, most usually because the period for amending the return has expired,<sup>81</sup> UK law provides for other means by which an overpayment of tax can be recovered.

First, the High Court retains an inherent jurisdiction to hear claims in damages and restitution unless implicitly or explicitly excluded by statute.<sup>82</sup> Where the ability to bring a High Court claim in restitution exists, it benefits from a number of distinct advantages.

Most importantly, if the overpayment of tax was made by mistake, such as the circumstances described above, then by reason of Section 32(1)(c) of the Limitation Act 1980, if the claim is brought as a High Court restitution claim, the limitation period of six years for seeking restitution of the tax overpaid does not commence running until the mistake is discovered or could, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered. In the context where the tax payment was originally made in accordance with the law as generally understood, but which was subsequently found to be incorrect by a judgment of the court (particularly of the CJEU), it has been held that the actual or constructive discovery of the mistake does not occur until the date of that judgment.<sup>83</sup> Thus, a claim brought within six years of a relevant CJEU decision declaring a UK tax to have been incompatible with EU law can cover all such payments going back to the first payment of the tax, or the UK's entry to the EU, whichever is the later. Other benefits of High Court restitution claims over statutory claims are that the rate of interest recoverable tends to be higher,<sup>84</sup> and costs are usually recoverable by the successful party, whereas that is not generally the case for the statutory tribunal regimes.<sup>85</sup>

Second, with effect from 1 April 2010, the FA 2009 introduced Paragraph 51A of Schedule 18 of the FA 1998 (Paragraph 51A). This provision grants a general right to the recovery of overpaid corporation tax in most circumstances, subject to a limitation period of four years after the end of the relevant accounting period. There are similar provisions for income tax.<sup>86</sup> It is also subject to a defence that the mistake must not have been in accordance with 'practice generally prevailing at the time'. However, as of 14 January 2014, this defence cannot apply where the claim seeks to enforce EU rights.<sup>87</sup> The defence will be applied otherwise.

It remains an open question as to whether this overpayment remedy has the effect of excluding the ability to bring High Court claims in EU law matters, at least until the exclusion of the 'practice generally prevailing' defence on 14 January 2014. Although it is expressly stated that a claim under Paragraph 51A is the only mechanism by which HMRC can be liable to a repayment of overpaid tax,<sup>88</sup> the Supreme Court has held, in relation to the predecessor provisions,<sup>89</sup> that the existence of the same ‘general prevailing practice defence’ rendered those provisions inapplicable to EU law claims, notwithstanding HMRC’s contention that the defence would be disapplied in an EU law context, or the conclusion of the courts that those previous provisions were implicitly exclusive.<sup>90</sup> However, where the provisions of Paragraph 51A do not apply, the ability to bring a High Court restitution claim will remain. Thus, High Court restitution claims have recently been upheld to recover compound interest upon the repayment of overpaid VAT where it has been held that the statutory regime only entitles claimants to the recovery of simple interest.<sup>91</sup>

84 Interest recoverable under statutory claims is set at the statutory rates that are intended to be below interest rates commercially available. Interest recoverable as part of a High Court restitution claim is at HMRC's actual rate of borrowing; see Deutsche Morgan Grenfell Group plc v. IRC [2006] UKHL 49, [2007] 1 AC 558. In some circumstances, interest is recoverable under a High Court claim on a compound interest basis. The circumstances in which interest is recoverable on such a basis is still the subject of litigation: see Sempre Metals v. IRC [2007] UKHL 34, [2008] 1 AC 561; Littlewoods Retail Ltd v. The Commissioners for Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs [2010] EWHC 1071 (Ch), [2010] STC 2072 and [2014] EWHC 868 (Ch), [2014] STC 1761; *Littlewoods Limited and Others v. 88 Schedule 18, Paragraph 51(6), FA 1998.

Third, claims for the recovery of under-declared input VAT and the recovery of over-declared output VAT must be made within a period of four years from the date on which the return to which the under or over-declared input or output VAT was to have been made.<sup>92</sup> Claims in respect of bad debt relief must be made within four years and six months from either the date on which the debt fell due and payable, or the date of the supply, whichever is the later.<sup>93</sup>

The recovery of interest on the repayment of overpaid VAT is governed by the statutory scheme outlined in Section 78, VATA 1994. However, the decision of the Court of Appeal in Littlewoods confirms that, in certain circumstances, this statutory scheme is incompatible with EU law and therefore must be disapplied.<sup>94</sup> EU law entitles the taxpayer to an adequate indemnity for the loss caused by the overpayment, which requires payment of interest broadly commensurate with the loss of use value of the overpaid tax.<sup>95</sup> Where the interest rates set out in the statutory provisions would not provide an adequate indemnity, those provisions fall to be disapplied and compound interest may be available. Nevertheless, the Court of Appeal held that the adequate indemnity requirement was not a ‘straitjacket’, such that while compound interest was appropriate in Littlewoods, its application would be determined on the facts of the given case. HMRC has also publicly stated its intention to seek permission to appeal to the Supreme Court, and it will be interesting to see how this issue develops.

Unfortunately, successive UK governments have shown a habit of using retrospective legislation to cancel, restrict or inhibit claims for the recovery of overpaid tax, particularly in the enforcement of EU rights. In 2003 the UK sought to restrict the limitation period applicable to such claims issued after the date that change was announced,<sup>96</sup> and in 2007<sup>97</sup> announced the cancellation outright of all claims already issued within time where the statutory limitation period being validly exercised was longer than six years. Both those provisions were found incompatible with EU law, and unlawful by the CJEU<sup>98</sup> and Supreme Court.<sup>99</sup> In 2013, further retrospective legislation amended the Court rules to protect only HMRC from orders for interim relief.<sup>100</sup> Litigation is currently pending regarding the lawfulness and effectiveness of those provisions.

In 2015, a particularly egregious form of retrospective legislation was introduced in an orchestrated way in the Finance (No. 2) Act 2015. First, with effect from 8 July 2015, the interest rate on outstanding judgment debts owed by HMRC was reduced from the standard 8 per cent per annum paid by defaulting judgment debtors to bank base plus 2 per cent per annum simple (currently 2.5 per cent per annum) just for HMRC.<sup>101</sup> On 26 October 2015, a further change was inserted into the same Finance Bill to impose a 45 per cent tax charge ring fenced from reliefs and withheld at source on successful claims for the recovery of overpaid tax.<sup>102</sup> The new charge replaces the current corporation tax charge of 20 per cent and applies to the interest component (and some principal amounts) where the rate of interest is calculated on the above basis (i.e., as a reflection of loss or gain and not on an uncommercial statutory rate). The charge applies even to past payments and judgments where appeals are still ongoing, and in those cases will be backdated to the accounting period in which the receipt was recognised in the profit and loss account (although the charge itself will not actually be created until the appeals conclude in the future). Litigation was commenced challenging the lawfulness of these provisions, which is listed for hearing in May 2017. While that litigation is pending, under the terms of this legislation, interest will accrue on the unpaid portion of any judgment debt at less than HMRC's cost of borrowing.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Where there is no other right of redress or appeal against an action or decision by HMRC, a taxpayer may seek the judicial review of that decision.<sup>103</sup> This may arise, for example, in circumstances where an assessment to tax has been raised in accordance with the law but in circumstances where HMRC acted unreasonably in doing so.<sup>104</sup> An application for judicial review must be made promptly, and in any event within three months of the date when grounds for the application first arose.<sup>105</sup> Judicial review is a discretionary remedy, and the decision will only be overturned by the court in fairly extreme cases.

An application for judicial review must be made to the Administrative Court of the High Court, which can either decide the case itself or transfer it to the Upper Tribunal.<sup>106</sup>

iii Claimants

In a direct tax context, a claim for the recovery of tax wrongly paid can only be made by the party that paid the tax. In certain circumstances, the right to bring a claim can be assigned to another party.<sup>107</sup> HMRC will accept that, provided the relevant conditions are met, an assignment of a High Court claim can be made, but tend not to accept that statutory claims are capable of assignment, although there are cases in which the assignment of statutory claims has been upheld.<sup>108</sup> In New Miles Ltd, the First-tier Tribunal allowed assignment of a right of appeal to the Upper Tribunal through substitution of the appellant, holding that such substitution was permitted as a ‘change of circumstance’ under Rule 9, FTR.<sup>109</sup> Rule 9(1) permits the substitution of a party ‘if the substitution had become necessary because of a change in circumstances since the start of proceedings’. In Skywell, the First-tier Tribunal found that there was no such change in circumstances to justify the substitution of parties.<sup>110</sup>

Before the Court of Appeal in FII,<sup>111</sup> the claimants argued that losses and other reliefs expended to shelter an undue charge were recoverable by way of a High Court restitution claim. Such an argument would enable company groups that surrendered reliefs to offset undue liabilities of other entities to recover those reliefs (or their value) so expended. This argument has been unsuccessful to date, but remains the subject of further possible appeal to the Supreme Court.

Claims for the repayment of overpaid VAT under the statutory schemes outlined above may only be made by ‘taxable persons’, that is to say the entity that is registered with and accounts for VAT to HMRC. However, following the CJEU decision in Danfoss,<sup>112</sup> where a person (such as an end consumer) has overpaid VAT in circumstances where it is not possible to obtain redress against the person to whom the tax was paid (by way of ordinary civil recovery proceedings), the Member State is required to provide that person with a mechanism through which he or she can obtain recovery of the overpaid sums. Issues connected with the practical application of Danfoss (and others) are the subject of ongoing litigation in the UK.<sup>113</sup>

VI COSTS

As a general rule, in the First-tier Tribunal, each party bears its own costs. The Tribunal may make a costs order in situations where costs are ‘wasted’ by reason of the improper, unreasonable or negligent act or omission of any legal or other representative;<sup>114</sup> or if a party acts unreasonably in bringing, defending or conducting the proceedings.<sup>115</sup> Whereas the old test for costs was that such conduct had to be ‘wholly unreasonable’, the new test introduces a lower hurdle. There is a growing body of case law concerning the interpretation of ‘unreasonable’ conduct.<sup>116</sup> Tribunals have held that a party (or their representative) acted unreasonably where they:

- a* failed to comply with tribunal directions;<sup>117</sup>
- b* introduced evidence at a late stage of the proceedings;<sup>118</sup>
- c* failed to attend a hearing;<sup>119</sup>
- d* attempted to rely on an argument that the Supreme Court had previously disposed of by majority judgment;<sup>120</sup>
- e* pursued a hopeless case that had an insufficient evidential foundation;<sup>121</sup> and
- f* failed to withdraw from proceedings sufficiently in advance of the hearing.<sup>122</sup>

The Tribunal has the general power to order costs in cases that are categorised as ‘complex’,<sup>123</sup> where costs will generally follow the event. However, once the taxpayer has been notified that the case is classified as complex, the taxpayer has 28 days to ‘opt out’ of the costs regime.<sup>124</sup>

In the Upper Tribunal, the High Court and the higher courts costs are, in principle, recoverable by the winning party. However, the rules governing their recovery are extremely complex.

i The Rees practice

HMRC has no intention of discontinuing from the Upper Tribunal and appeal courts its current costs practice (known as ‘the Rees practice’).<sup>125</sup> HMRC will consider exercising its discretion to waive its right to costs where HMRC is appealing an adverse decision, and in cases involving financial hardship or a point of law that, if clarified, would benefit taxpayers as a whole. HMRC may also adopt the Rees practice in First-tier Tribunal cases categorised as ‘complex’ unless the taxpayer has opted out of the costs regime.

VII ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION (ADR)

Historically, ADR has not played a part in resolving tax disputes. Recently, however, HMRC published its LSS, commentary to the LSS and guidance on resolving tax disputes using ADR. When discussing ADR, HMRC refers to the use of ‘mediation’ rather than ‘arbitration’, as it feels that arbitration is not suited to the field of taxation.

Two pilot ADR projects targeting different taxpayer profiles were introduced by HMRC in 2011 and 2012 to explore when mediation might be appropriate for resolving tax disputes. Following the publication of two reports in July and September 2013 detailing the results of these pilot projects,<sup>126</sup> HMRC’s ADR capacity was expanded to include a dedicated ADR function, facilitated by its Dispute Resolution Unit. HMRC’s ADR guidance notes the commitment to using a collaborative approach wherever possible; in the vast majority of cases, this will involve disputes being settled by negotiation and agreement between the parties, or by litigation, without recourse to ADR.

HMRC considers mediation to be appropriate in a range of cases, including those where collaborative working relationships appear to have broken down and facilitated mediation may help to restore them, and those where the issues appear to be ‘all or nothing’, but there is a possibility that structured discussion might uncover an alternative approach that would enable HMRC to resolve the dispute in accordance with the terms of the LSS.<sup>127</sup>

In contrast, mediation is considered inappropriate where it would be more efficient to have an issue judicially clarified so that the precedent gained can be applied to other cases. Furthermore, mediation is not recommended where resolution can only be achieved by departing from an established HMRC viewpoint on a technical issue, and there are no exceptional facts or circumstances to justify a departure from law or practice.<sup>128</sup>

Taxpayers are encouraged to ask HMRC to consider using ADR. HMRC will respond within 30 days with an answer as to whether ADR is appropriate for resolving a dispute. If so, HMRC will then send the taxpayer a memorandum of understanding to complete, which will set out the process and confirm the taxpayer’s agreement to participate in ADR.<sup>129</sup>

If a taxpayer's dispute cannot be resolved and HMRC has made an appealable decision, taxpayers can ask for their dispute to be referred to an independent tribunal for a hearing or may ask for a statutory review.<sup>130</sup>

i General anti-abuse rule (GAAR)

Part 5 of the FA 2013 took the significant step of introducing a GAAR to the UK with effect from 17 July 2013. HMRC has also published and updated extensive guidance about the scope, objectives and application of the GAAR.<sup>131</sup>

The GAAR aims to target abusive tax avoidance schemes. It applies to corporation tax, income tax, capital gains tax, petroleum revenue tax, inheritance tax, stamp duty land tax, annual residential property tax and, following the FA 2015, diverted profits tax.<sup>132</sup> VAT is excluded from its scope.

To determine whether a scheme should be counteracted as a result of being abusive, it must be determined if there are abusive arrangements that give rise to a relevant tax advantage, and if it is reasonable to conclude that the tax advantage was the main purpose, or one of the main purposes, of the arrangements.<sup>133</sup> The objective test for abuse is whether entering into the tax arrangements, or carrying them out, cannot reasonably be regarded as a reasonable course of action in relation to the relevant tax provisions having regard to all the circumstances (the double reasonableness test).<sup>134</sup> The development of such a reasonableness test and its boundaries are awaited when the test is applied in practice.

If tax arrangements are found to be abusive, these arrangements are to be counteracted by making adjustments.<sup>135</sup> If counteraction is used, consequential adjustments can be claimed to provide relief to the taxpayer to ensure there is not excessive taxation.<sup>136</sup> HMRC's intention is that the GAAR be applied initially by taxpayers themselves, through their own counteraction using self-assessment or in their accounts and adjusting any tax advantage on a just and reasonable basis. HMRC also has powers of counteraction on a just and reasonable basis.<sup>137</sup> Procedural amendments have been introduced, following the FA 2016, to ensure that the GAAR procedure works efficiently in regards to marketed tax avoidance schemes, and to enable HMRC to provisionally counteract under GAAR, within assessing time limits, while maintaining the current procedural safeguards for taxpayers.<sup>138</sup>

137 Section 209, FA 2013 as amended by Section 156, FA 2016.

138 Schedule 43, FA 2013 as amended by Section 157, FA 2016.

The GAAR's counteraction measures will be subject to the usual appeals procedure, with normal time limits. If the matter proceeds to litigation, the burden of proof lies on HMRC to show that on the balance of probabilities the tax arrangement was abusive, and that the counteraction imposed is just and reasonable.

Following a consultation in 2015,<sup>139</sup> the FA 2016 introduced a new specific penalty, which came into force in September 2016, for all cases successfully counteracted by the GAAR. If a taxpayer submits a return, claim or document to HMRC that includes arrangements that are later found to be counteracted, then the penalty, 60 per cent of the counteracted value, will apply.<sup>140</sup> The aim of the penalty is to ensure an effective disincentive to enter into or engage in abusive tax avoidance.

The GAAR is a progression from the manner in which tax abuse has been countered by the courts in recent years using the Ramsay principle,<sup>141</sup> which introduced the principle of purposive interpretation to tax disputes, whereby the wording of legislation is key, but where the purpose and context of the statute are considered aids to interpretation. Ramsay led to some uncertainty in the courts' approach to abuse (see BMBF<sup>142</sup> and SPI).<sup>143</sup>

A recent decision, in UBS AG,<sup>144</sup> illustrates the application of the GAAR. The judges held that the transaction had 'no real world purpose of any kind', and found that a purposive interpretation would suggest that the scheme had been 'inserted for the sole purpose of tax avoidance'. This decision sheds some light on the courts' approach to abuse. However, it remains to be seen how the rule will be developed.

ii Accelerated payment notices, follower notices and partner payment notices

The FA 2014 introduced new provisions, which came into force in July 2014, under which HMRC has the power in certain circumstances to require payment of disputed tax in advance of ultimate resolution of the dispute.<sup>145</sup> These provisions are aimed at promoting early settlement of disputes. In 2014 and 2015, around 10,000 such notices were issued, and a total of 60,000 were issued in 2016. The notices, since their introduction, have received a lot of criticism: 2,000 notices were withdrawn in 2015 and more than 4,000 in 2016 for errors in the notices and the procedure followed.

HMRC may issue an accelerated payment notice (APN) in circumstances where HMRC has opened an enquiry into the taxpayer's return or an appeal is ongoing.<sup>146</sup> Where a notice is issued to a partner and an enquiry is opened into the partnership tax return, the notice is known as a partner payment notice (PPN), although the provisions are otherwise near-identical.<sup>147</sup> The return or claim must<sup>148</sup> have been made in respect of a tax advantage arising from the arrangements in question. Further to this, one of the following requirements must be met:

- a* HMRC has given the taxpayer a follower notice in relation to the same return, claim or appeal;
- b* HMRC has allocated a disclosure of tax avoidance schemes reference number to the tax arrangements, or the scheme was included on HMRC's list of users who may be required to make an accelerated payment; or
- c* HMRC has issued a counteraction notice under the GAAR and at least two members of the GAAR Advisory Panel consider that entering into the tax arrangements was not a reasonable course of action.<sup>149</sup>

The APN or PPN must specify the amount of the payment.<sup>150</sup> The taxpayer has 90 days to object in writing, following which HMRC will confirm, withdraw or, where the taxpayer objects to the amount specified, amend the APN or PPN. There is no right of appeal against the confirmation of an APN or PPN, and the taxpayer must make the payment before the relevant payment date.<sup>151</sup> This also applies where an appeal is ongoing. If the taxpayer fails to make the payment by the relevant date, HMRC may issue penalties, beginning at 5 per cent of the amount in question.<sup>152</sup> A recent decision held that a PPN can be issued to an LLP, as the relevant partners have the capacity to know of enquiries being opened, even if official notices were not sent to them.<sup>153</sup>

HMRC may issue a follower notice (FN) in circumstances where HMRC considers that there has been a final judicial ruling on a relevant issue to the disputed tax in question. The provisions operate in a similar fashion to those for APNs.<sup>154</sup> The notice must be issued within one year of the later of the date of the ruling or date on which HMRC received the claim or appeal, and cannot be issued to the same taxpayer in relation to the same tax arrangement, tax advantage, ruling or period. The notice must identify the ruling that HMRC considers to be relevant, its reasoning for this belief, the effects of the taxpayer objecting to the FN and that penalties may apply if the taxpayer does not take corrective action.<sup>155</sup> The taxpayer may amend the return (and notify HMRC) or object to the FN within 90 days by

In theory, double taxation conventions are, like any international treaty, not directly enforceable by taxpayers; they are no more than contracts enforceable by the contracting states themselves. Rights granted to individuals under international treaties are only enforceable to the extent they are incorporated by legislation. It is also permissible under UK law for legislation to be introduced that contradicts the terms of treaties, since the sovereignty of the Crown extends to breaching treaties. However, where a treaty has been introduced into UK law and its terms might conflict with domestic legislation that is capable of more than one meaning, then the meaning that is consistent with the treaty is to be preferred.<sup>158</sup>

The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties was incorporated into UK law on 27 January 1980. Its rules of interpretation are binding, and it is frequently relied upon by the courts in interpreting the terms of double taxation treaties.<sup>159</sup> The commentary to the OECD conventions can be relied upon to interpret the terms of treaties that follow the OECD Model.<sup>160</sup>

Double taxation conventions are incorporated into UK law by statutory instrument, which is secondary legislation that does not require passage through Parliament. The legislative power to do so is provided by Section 2, Taxation (International and Other Provisions) Act (TIOPA) 2010, although the important cases on its application concern the predecessor provision, Section 788, Income and Corporation Taxes Act (ICTA) 1988. Section 6, TIOPA provides that where the terms of a double taxation convention have been incorporated into law via a statutory instrument, they take effect 'despite anything in any enactment', but subject to two important restrictions.

First the treaty takes effect subject to the provisions in Part 2, TIOPA and Part 18, ICTA. Thus, the terms of a double taxation convention, even where incorporated into UK law by statutory instrument, can still be overridden by the insertion of an intentionally contradictory provision within those Parts.<sup>161</sup> Second, Section 6, TIOPA only enables incorporation into UK law by this mechanism of those provisions of double taxation

161 For example, in 1992 Section 808A was introduced into Part 18 of ICTA to override the interpretation given to the arm's-length test by the then Tax Tribunal, the Special conventions that afford relief from double taxation in relation to the various taxing provisions included in that Section. If the tax concerned does not meet any of these descriptions, no rights provided by the double taxation convention will be enforceable. Although the current wording of the provision is somewhat different from the predecessor provision (Section 788, ICTA), that previous provision had been held not to extend to charges upon apportioned profits under the controlled foreign companies (CFC) rules<sup>162</sup> or to advance corporation tax (ACT).<sup>163</sup>

There has been considerable litigation on the meaning and application of the non-discrimination articles (NDA) in double taxation conventions that follow the standard OECD Model wording,<sup>164</sup> and from which the following principles derive:

- a To establish whether the UK subsidiary of a company resident in the other contracting state is subjected to other or more burdensome taxation or requirements than another similar enterprise in breach of the NDA, the relevant comparison to make is with the treatment afforded to the UK subsidiary of a UK resident parent.<sup>165</sup>
- b A breach of the NDA will, however, arise only where that difference in treatment is by reason of the foreign ownership of the UK subsidiary. In circumstances where the domestic legislation passes a tax liability from subsidiary to parent, it is permissible to refuse the same treatment to the cross-border group if the parent is not subject to UK tax. In those circumstances, the difference in treatment is not by reason of the foreign ownership, but by reason of the fact that the tax liability cannot be passed on to the parent, as it would not be liable to UK tax.<sup>166</sup> Conversely, the refusal of group relief between two UK-resident subsidiaries of a common foreign parent or link company (where group relief would be available had the parent been UK-resident) would offend the NDA, as the liability of the parent company to UK tax is irrelevant to the entitlement to group relief between its resident subsidiaries.<sup>167</sup>
- c The subject UK provisions must be considered as a whole when establishing whether other or more burdensome taxation or requirements arise contrary to the NDA. In d Where a UK subsidiary of a UK parent could, by invoking EU rights, override a restriction that otherwise applies under UK legislation, it may breach the NDA not to extend the same treatment to a UK subsidiary of a foreign parent, whether or not that parent is resident in another Member State.<sup>169</sup>

i The UK courts' approach to the interpretation of European law

The English courts' first encounters with EU law and the case law of the CJEU were something of a culture shock. According to Lord Denning in Buchanan v. Babco:<sup>170</sup>

They adopt a method which they call in English by strange words – at any rate they were strange to me – the 'schematic and teleological' method of interpretation [...] all it means is that judges do not go by the literal meaning of the words or by the grammatical structure of the sentence. [...] To our eyes – short-sighted by tradition – it is legislation pure and simple. But to their eyes it is fulfilling the true role of the courts.

While the UK courts are now comfortable interpreting the EU VAT legislation in light of its scheme and purpose and seeking rulings in that field from the CJEU only selectively, they remain far less comfortable interpreting the TFEU in the context of challenges to direct tax provisions. Other than in minor cases, the UK courts have, therefore, tended to refer such cases to the CJEU, leading to a series of CJEU judgments on UK direct tax provisions over 168 The Felixstowe Dock and Railway Company Limited.

169 This argument has only arisen for a decision to date in the context of the disallowance of interest deductions for thin capitalisation reasons – Test Claimants in the Thin Cap Group Litigation – where, while upholding the argument in principle, the Court found it was inapplicable to those circumstances. It has also been litigated in relation to cross-border group relief: Finnforest UK Limited & ors v. Revenue and Customs Commissioners [2011] UKFTT 342 (TC), [2011] SFTD 889.

the past 10 to 15 years.<sup>171</sup> In FII, the UK courts sought no fewer than three references, in part to clarify the guidance received from the CJEU.<sup>172</sup>

To date, in the direct tax field the UK courts have thus been concerned mainly with implementing interpretative rulings given by the CJEU. In that connection, a key issue for the courts to decide has been whether, in the light of the CJEU's guidance, the relevant domestic provisions fall to be disapplied as unlawful, or whether they should be judicially moulded to achieve a conforming interpretation.<sup>173</sup> In a series of decisions, the English Court of Appeal, following earlier rulings of the House of Lords in the EU or the human rights cases of Ghaidan v. Mendoza,<sup>174</sup> Pickstone v. Freemans<sup>175</sup> and Lister v. Forth Dry Dock,<sup>176</sup> has departed significantly from traditional domestic principles of interpretation and construed UK provisions contrary to their wording to render them compatible with EU law (see in particular IDT,<sup>177</sup> Vodafone II<sup>178</sup> and the Court of Appeal's judgment in FII).<sup>179</sup> According to Lady Justice Arden in IDT:

It is also clear from the Ghaidan case that the interpretation of legislation under Section 3 [of the Human Rights Act] or the Marleasing principle may involve a substantial departure from the language used though it will not involve a departure from the fundamental or cardinal features of the legislation. It is possible to read the legislation up (expansively) or down (restrictively) or to read words into the legislation.<sup>180</sup>

Further, when analysing the application of the Marleasing principle in FII the Court of Appeal noted that ‘Statutory provisions can be read as subject to a limitation provided that the limitation does not go against the grain of the legislation’.<sup>181</sup>

Thus, in IDT, the Court of Appeal held that it was possible to mould the UK provisions on VAT to fill a gap in the UK legislation that allowed taxpayers to avoid paying tax on phone cards in either Ireland or the UK. In Vodafone II, the Court of Appeal held that the exceptions to the UK CFC legislation could be extended so as to render the legislation compatible with Article 43 TFEU as interpreted by the CJEU in Cadbury Schweppes. In FII, the Court of Appeal held that the UK provisions on ACT could be moulded contrary to their wording to give the claimants a tax credit where EU law so required.

It may be noted that in all three cases the Court of Appeal moulded the legislation to prevent the taxpayer from obtaining what it perceived to be a windfall. In IDT, this defeated the taxpayer’s claim entirely, and in Vodafone II and FII it had the effect of imposing retrospectively on the taxpayer an evidentiary burden not envisaged by the unmoulded legislation.

The Court of Appeal’s findings in these cases have not been considered by the Supreme Court. It may be noted, however, that the Supreme Court did consider and overturn another finding of the Court of Appeal in FII, in which it held that Section 33, TMA 1970 could be moulded contrary to its wording to give the claimants an exclusive statutory remedy for their EU law rights, barring them from using their common law remedies with the accompanying longer time limits. Further consideration of the issue of conforming interpretation by the UK courts, including the Supreme Court, seems likely.

ii Specific rules relating to VAT

Current UK VAT thresholds

Registration	Threshold
Registration for taxable supplies	Taxable turnover of £83,000 in the previous 12 months
De-registration VAT	Taxable turnover of £81,000 or less in the previous 12 months
Registration for distance selling	Value of distance sales to UK customer exceeds £70,000 (if distance sales include excise goods, then registration is required regardless of the value)
Registration for acquisitions from other EU countries	Goods acquired exceed £83,000
Payment on account threshold	Annual VAT liability of £2.3 million or more. If the liability falls below £1.8 million, businesses can apply to stop making payments on account
Intrastat thresholds	The exemption threshold for dispatches is £250,000 in 12 months and for arrivals £1.5 million in 12 months. The delivery terms threshold is £24 million. The low value consignment threshold is £150
Error reporting threshold	£10,000 or 1% of the total sales for the period (excluding VAT) subject to an upper limit of £50,000

181 Test Claimants in the FII Group Litigation (CA), Paragraph 260.

Corrections to VAT returns

For errors that exceed the error reporting threshold, a declaration should be made to the VAT Error Correction Team on form VAT 652.<sup>182</sup> Errors below this threshold can be corrected by adjustment in the current VAT return.<sup>183</sup>

Partial exemption

In circumstances where a taxable person (i.e., one registered for VAT) makes supplies of goods or services that are subject to VAT, any VAT incurred by that taxable person in the process of making those taxable supplies (input tax) is recoverable. Where a taxpayer makes supplies that are exempt from VAT, it is not possible for that taxable person to recover input tax attributable to those supplies. Input tax incurred in these circumstances is referred to as 'blocked' input tax.

In circumstances where a taxable person will make 'mixed' supplies of both taxable and exempt services (also referred to as business and non-business activities), it is possible to attribute the input tax incurred in making the different supplies directly; that which is attributable to the taxable supplies will be recoverable in the normal way as outlined above. Often it is not possible to attribute input tax directly, because the same supply has been used in relation to both taxable and exempt aspects of the business. Such input tax is referred to as 'residual' input tax. To calculate what proportion of residual input tax may be recovered, it is necessary to use a 'partial exemption' calculation. There are two types: the standard method or a special method. The detailed mechanics of those calculations can be found in VAT Notice 706.<sup>184</sup>

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Following the introduction of the GAAR in 2013, there has been sustained political pressure on HMRC to safeguard the UK tax base by combating illegitimate avoidance and abuse. We have already seen considerable litigation testing the boundary between acceptable and illegitimate tax avoidance, which is only likely to increase.

This political focus on HMRC to counter tax avoidance and increase recoveries has produced extensive new powers. As discussed above, over the past two years, new legislation has extended HMRC's powers over disclosure and introduced powers to issue notices to collect tax even before any court ruling on a dispute and without any form of judicial safeguard. In 2015, an unsuccessful judicial review was brought in the High Court to challenge the exercise of this power.<sup>185</sup> There is an appeal outstanding to the Court of Appeal, and it remains to be seen what the eventual outcome will be on this matter. As things stand, however HMRC has made it clear that it intends to continue to use, and even increase the use of, its power to issue such notices in future.

In recent years, both the Supreme Court and CJEU have applied and developed the 'no possibilities' test in relation to cross-border group relief on subsidiary losses.<sup>186</sup> In Marks & Spencer, the Supreme Court had previously found in favour of the taxpayer on the question of the relevant date at which the 'no possibilities' test should be applied. In February 2014, the Supreme Court considered the application of that test to group relief claims that had initially been made outside of the statutory time period and was later made again, within the statutory time period, upon dissolution of certain companies within the group. The Court held that the 'date of the claim' included those subsequent claims that had been issued within time. It also resolved the question of how to calculate a foreign loss for surrender for UK tax purposes in the company's favour, and found for HMRC on the limitation of claims that fell under the previous pay and file system. Prior to this, in December 2013 the CJEU handed down judgment in the third reference in FII Group Litigation.<sup>187</sup> The Court held that, in removing a cause of action for recovery of tax paid without notice, retrospectively and without transitional provisions, the UK government had breached EU law principles of effectiveness, legal certainty and legitimate expectations. European law has continued to influence litigation in both the direct and indirect tax areas, and we see no reason why this trend will not continue, with numerous cases currently before the UK and European courts. Most recently, the Court of Appeal referred questions to the CJEU regarding the correct interpretation and application of the VAT Directive in relation to whether particular vehicle finance lease agreements constituted a supply of goods or services for VAT purposes.<sup>188</sup> Transfer pricing is another area in which the European Commission has continued to be particularly active.<sup>189</sup>

The availability of compound interest in claims against HMRC is another vigorously contested issue due to its financial significance. Following the House of Lords' judgment in Sempre Metals,<sup>190</sup> it is clear that compound interest is in principle available for certain claims in the field of direct tax. Perhaps unsurprisingly, HMRC contends that, even in the field of direct tax, the availability of compound interest is restricted to the very specific circumstances of Sempre Metals. In the field of indirect tax, HMRC contends that there can be no liability to pay compound interest as statute exclusively provides for simple interest. These issues have been variously challenged over the past few years.<sup>191</sup> As mentioned above, in the area of VAT, the Court of Appeal recently upheld a decision of Henderson J entitling claimants to compound interest on claims for recovery of unlawfully levied VAT.<sup>192</sup>

A further issue being debated in the UK courts is whether HMRC can, both in principle and in practice, run a defence to claims in restitution of unduly paid sums that the Exchequer has changed its position by spending those sums, believing that they were lawfully due. This question came up for decision before the High Court in Franked Investment Income Group Litigation. The defence was rejected not only on grounds of EU and English law, but also on the grounds that HMRC had failed to show on the facts a causal connection between the receipt of the tax and the payments.

A decision of particular significance in 2015 in relation to recovering unlawful VAT was Investment Trust Companies.<sup>193</sup> The case involved the payment of unlawful VAT by investment trusts to their managers for management services. The managers then paid a proportion (the '75s') to HMRC and set the remaining proportion (the '25s') against an input tax that the managers had paid to their third-party suppliers. The managers made claims under Section 80, VATA. HMRC repaid some of the VAT, but capped the claims at three years under Section 80(4). HMRC made further repayments for periods up until 4 December 1996 (the date when the cap was introduced), but refused claims after that date (the 'dead period') The trusts then brought claims against HMRC for restitution at common law and repayment under directly effective EU law rights. The Court of Appeal held Section 80, VATA did not provide an exclusive scheme and did not impinge on restitution of the 75s at common law. The Section 80(4) time limit did not, therefore, apply, meaning that VAT paid during the dead period was, in principle, recoverable. This decision has an appeal pending to the Supreme Court. The eventual outcome will have significant implications in the future for claims relating to the payment of unlawful VAT.

Finally, a large number of claims were recently issued that challenge the legality of Paragraph 51A of Schedule 18 of the FA 1998, which effectively removes the High Court's jurisdiction to hear cases seeking common law remedies in situations where statutory remedies are available through the tax tribunals. The claims are yet to be heard by the courts. Should these challenges succeed, a number of remedies that are arguably no longer available to claimants in tax matters will once again become available.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

2016 has been a busy year in the fields of direct and indirect tax both in the domestic and European context. 2017 will again see the confluence of a number of forces. Continued public pressure on HMRC to challenge abusive tax arrangements is likely to be fuelled by the introduction of the ability to demand and collect tax in dispute without any prior judicial decision. It will be interesting to see how aspects of the GAAR, including the double reasonableness test, will be developed by the UK courts, and whether the judicial review will ultimately be successful in the appeal courts. Against this, a number of group litigation actions seeking the repayment of taxes said to have been paid in breach of EU law over several decades, which have been proceeding through the courts for almost 10 years, have now reached a position where a breach of EU law seems to have been established, giving rise to a whole slew of questions concerning the level of recovery. Some of these issues have been considered by the courts in the past year, while others remain to be determined or are subject to appeal. HMRC will continue to be faced with demands to recover more tax on one hand and demands to repay tax collected many years ago on the other. The environment in the short term once again looks to be uncertain and challenging.

UNITED STATES

I INTRODUCTION

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) is the primary United States government agency taxpayers face in federal tax disputes. The vast majority of tax disputes are resolved within the IRS's settlement apparatus, leading to certain important practical considerations.

i Overview of the US tax reporting and enforcement system

The United States tax system is self-reporting; each taxpayer prepares and files a return showing the amount of tax owed to the federal government.<sup>2</sup> For income tax returns, the starting point for every taxpayer is the gross income earned during the taxable year.<sup>3</sup> Various offsets, credits and deductions are applied, and a taxable income amount to which the appropriate tax rates are applied is determined. By filing a tax return, the taxpayer authorises the IRS to record an assessment of tax in that amount on its books. The IRS maintains a 'transcript of account' for each taxpayer, which reflects all the activity (e.g., the filing date of the return, date and amount of assessment, date of examination) that occurs with respect to each return filed by the taxpayer.<sup>4</sup>

1 Edward L. Froelich is of counsel at Morrison & Foerster LLP.

2 This chapter focuses on federal tax disputes; however, the 50 states and the District of Columbia have similar voluntary, self-reporting systems of taxation, and similarly enforce their revenue laws through audits and collection. United States territories, such as the US Virgin Islands, have systems similar to the states.

3 One exception is federal estate tax, which is imposed on the value of assets in the estate as opposed to income earned by the estate (for which there is a separate income tax return).

4 The Internal Revenue Code imposes numerous information reporting obligations that, if not properly carried out, can result in significant penalties. However, this chapter does not focus in any depth on information returns or the penalties associated therewith.

Any IRS-initiated assessment, as opposed to a self-assessment by the taxpayer, can only be recorded after the IRS satisfies strict rules of procedure and notice, generally called deficiency procedures. These procedures entitle the taxpayer to judicial review of the IRS's proposed assessments prior to payment. The primary notice received by the taxpayer is formally called a statutory notice of deficiency (it is sometimes also called a 'ticket to the Tax Court') and allows the taxpayer 90 days in which to petition the United States Tax Court.<sup>5</sup> The Tax Court is the only forum in which a taxpayer can dispute a proposed income tax assessment without first paying the additional tax. In rare cases, such as if the IRS believes that the taxpayer may transfer assets beyond the IRS's jurisdiction to avoid payment of delinquent taxes, the IRS may make a jeopardy assessment that allows it to prescind from the normal deficiency procedures and make an immediate assessment.

The great majority of individual US taxpayers pay taxes throughout the calendar year by authorising their employers to withhold from their salaries and to pay to the IRS income tax and employment taxes (e.g., social security). Depending upon the amount of their annual revenues, US corporations are required to make greater or lesser payments of income tax, called estimated tax payments, each taxable quarter or at more frequent intervals within the quarter. Self-employed individuals have a similar quarterly payment obligation. If after the conclusion of a particular taxable period the taxpayer believes that it has overpaid its tax, it may submit a claim for a refund to the IRS.

In addition to income and employment taxes, the Code imposes a variety of excise taxes. These are imposed on the manufacture or distribution of certain goods, such as fuel, and on services, including telecommunications and air transportation. As a general matter, the consumer bears the cost of excise taxes, and the manufacturer or distributor is essentially a collection agent for the government. As with other taxes, excise taxes are also self-reported by the manufacturer or distributor, and paid through periodic tax returns and deposits. Income tax is by far the largest revenue source for the government.

Disputes over excise taxes can be resolved both administratively and judicially.

Income earned in the United States by foreign persons is subject to withholding. Income subject to this withholding includes income that is 'effectively connected' with a trade or business within the US and certain investment income.<sup>6</sup> US payers to foreign persons generally act as withholding agents who collect the appropriate tax and pay it to the IRS. Tax treaties can beneficially modify the statutory withholding rules and rates. Because foreign persons are often outside the jurisdiction of the IRS, the IRS will generally audit the US withholding agent and impose any deficiencies on that person. Withholding agents can dispute assertions of deficiencies within the administrative apparatus of the IRS and can seek judicial relief if necessary.

ii IRS enforcement and guidance roles

The IRS is a federal agency within the United States Department of Treasury. The Commissioner of the Internal Revenue is the agency head (the Commissioner's side of the house). Legal counsel for the Commissioner is the Chief Counsel of the IRS (Counsel's side of the house). Together, these executive officials determine the programmes, policies and actions of the IRS. Ultimate supervisory authority over the IRS rests with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Tax Policy and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Prior to a substantial reorganisation in 1999, the IRS audit and collection offices were divided geographically. The IRS is now divided into four operating divisions:

- a* Wage and Investment Division;
- b* Small Business/Self-Employed Division;
- c* Large Business and International (LB&I) Division (formerly Large and Mid-Size Business Division); and
- d* Tax Exempt and Government Entities Division.

These divisions carry out the basic tasks of the IRS (primarily the audit function) with respect to the different types of taxpayers within each division. Each division is directed by an operating division commissioner, who reports directly to the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue.

The organisational structure of the Chief Counsel mirrors that of the Commissioner. Each operating division has its own operating division counsel (ODC), who reports directly to the Chief Counsel. The ODCs supervise 'field counsel', who in turn support the IRS agents who audit taxpayers 'in the field'. The Chief Counsel has numerous specialised attorneys in the IRS National Office in Washington, DC, whose task is to provide guidance to taxpayers on matters of interpretation of the Code and Treasury Regulations, and to assist with particularly technical or difficult questions on specific taxpayer cases when asked by IRS agents who are working on those cases. Such assistance can take the form of written memoranda to field agents, for example, Field Service Advice or Technical Advice memoranda. The Chief Counsel also maintains a cadre of dedicated trial attorneys to represent the IRS in cases filed in the US Tax Court. By statute, trial attorneys at the US Department of Justice Tax Division represent the government in tax cases in all other courts.

To handle the receipt and processing of tax returns, the IRS maintains several service centres throughout the country. These centres perform the bulk of all routine interactions with taxpayers, including issuing notices of adjustment, penalty imposition in certain circumstances, payment of refunds and change of address notices.

iii Enforcement

The main enforcement mechanism of the IRS is the audit function through which one or more IRS revenue agents review the tax returns of a specific taxpayer. Depending on the complexity of the tax return under examination, the revenue agent may be assisted by certain IRS specialists (such as financial products, international tax or economic experts).<sup>7</sup>

7 The IRS has both civil and criminal audit functions. This chapter focuses on civil audit disputes. Criminal audits involve the investigation of possible tax crimes, such as tax evasion, and are principally carried out by a special office within the IRS called the Criminal Investigation Division (CID). CID agents are trained particularly in forensic audit skills. After an audit investigation has proceeded to a certain point, CID agents may refer a case to the US Department of Justice for prosecution and thereafter support the Department of

The IRS uses a statistical method, which is not disclosed to the public, to select individual returns. Some large corporate returns are routinely audited, although this practice is in the process of changing in light of LB&I's recent adoption of a 'campaign audit method', discussed in more detail below. In short, the campaign method focuses audit efforts on certain issues the IRS believes to be likely areas of tax avoidance and selects taxpayers based on whether they have such issues in their returns. Occasionally, the IRS pursues issue-specific audit 'initiatives'. These initiatives will focus on a particular area of tax compliance, and taxpayers are selected for audit consistent with the initiative's focus and goals. For example, in 2010 the IRS commenced a three-year worker classification audit initiative that focused primarily on the classification of workers as either employees or independent contractors. The IRS was concerned that there may have been widespread misclassification of workers. Accordingly, 6,000 US employers, including small and large businesses, were audited during the initiative. Subsequently, the IRS implemented another audit initiative targeting high-wealth individuals and their related entities. This initiative was precipitated primarily by the IRS's view that such individuals had a higher likelihood of tax non-compliance, especially with respect to tax reporting regarding their foreign assets and related income. As discussed later, offshore tax avoidance remains an overall enforcement priority of the IRS and the Department of Justice.<sup>8</sup>

A further enforcement mechanism is collection. Once a tax has been assessed, the IRS is authorised to perform certain collection activities. IRS revenue officers, as opposed to revenue agents, carry out collection activities. Taxpayers are entitled to certain procedural protections (the 'collection due process') prior to actual collection by the IRS. The protections can be overridden in certain cases where the IRS believes that assets may be transferred outside its jurisdiction. In that event, the only option for the taxpayer is to file a claim for a refund of taxes paid and, if necessary, pursue that claim in court.

iv Guidance

The IRS (sometimes in conjunction with the Assistant Secretary for Tax Policy) issues significant guidance every year to taxpayers. There are generally two kinds of guidance: formal and informal. Formal guidance includes Treasury regulations, revenue rulings and procedures, and form instructions. Informal guidance includes letter rulings to specific taxpayers called private letter rulings, written advice of the Chief Counsel, service centre advice and, to a lesser extent, the IRS's Internal Revenue Manual, which contains its own interpretation and implementation of the revenue laws.

Justice in any further prosecution efforts. CID agents are also authorised to seize property and assets of taxpayers, and are sometimes detailed to other federal prosecution efforts that involve financial crimes such as money laundering.

8 See src.bna.com/bLg (IRS 29 December 2015 statement discussing restructuring of LB&I organisation to create new executive positions, a number addressing cross-border issues) and 90 DTR G-4 (7 May 2016 remarks of Don Fort, Deputy Chief in the IRS CID, that international tax enforcement remains a 'huge priority' for the agency).

II COMMENCING DISPUTES

Tax disputes begin with the IRS in one of two general ways: when the IRS decides to audit a tax return and disagrees with one or more of the positions reflected on the return; or when the taxpayer affirmatively seeks to recover tax it believes it has overpaid and the IRS refuses to repay it.

Taxpayers and the IRS can also raise disputes about the collection of taxes (e.g., a taxpayer might claim that the IRS did not follow proper procedure in levying on its bank accounts). Below, we focus on disputes over the merits of tax return positions rather than on the IRS collection efforts. In this context, almost all federal tax disputes begin in an administrative setting.

i Administrative phase of tax disputes: audits

The IRS's general authority to examine is based on Sections 6001, 6201 and 7602 of the Code. Section 6001 provides a general authority for the IRS to make regulations requiring every taxpayer to keep records and file returns. Section 6201 authorises the IRS to make enquiries, determinations and assessments of all taxes under internal revenue laws. Section 7602 and the following Sections authorise the IRS to examine any books, records, papers, or other relevant data or material, of the taxpayer or third parties. Together, these provide the basic authority to conduct examinations of taxpayers and to request specific information during those examinations.

Types of audit

There are two types of audit: 'face-to-face' and 'correspondence'.

In a face-to-face audit, a revenue agent meets with the taxpayer to gather information either at the taxpayer's premises (in the field) or at the IRS office (in the office). Generally, corporate taxpayers and higher net worth individual taxpayers are examined through a field examination, whereas lower net worth taxpayers will be subject to an office examination. In a correspondence audit, the IRS service centre that received the return generates and delivers certain notices based on errors or discrepancies in the return. One common discrepancy involves dividends. The IRS receives notices that detail the dividend amounts received by each taxpayer in a taxable year. If the taxpayer did not fully report the dividend income on its return, the service centre will generate a notice that proposes an adjustment to the return based on the dividend income. In cases where there was a mistake in the dividend reporting to the IRS, the taxpayer can provide an explanation, and an employee in the service centre will review that explanation and act accordingly.

Income tax audits are generally conducted by revenue agents and international examiners (revenue agents who specialise in the US tax aspects of cross-border activities), while employment tax audits are carried out by employment tax agents. Estate tax audits are conducted by an estate tax attorney. Unlike all other audits, the lead IRS agent in an estate tax audit is required to be an attorney.

Initiating an audit

The IRS commences a face-to-face audit by sending a letter notifying the taxpayer that the return or returns for a particular period have been selected for audit.<sup>9</sup> A standard form letter is used that will indicate the specific operating division of the IRS that is performing the audit. In the letter, the IRS agent requests a time to meet with the taxpayer to discuss the development of an audit plan and issues preliminary information and document requests (IDRs). Responses to these initial IDRs are usually requested at the time of the first meeting. Prior to the audit, IRS agents will have performed background research on the taxpayer, including obtaining any publicly available information, and will have performed an overall risk analysis to identify possible return positions that the IRS considers to be aggressive. Such positions will receive extra focus during the audit.

In most circumstances, outside counsel is not retained by the taxpayer at this stage of IRS audit activity. Large companies have tax departments that include skilled tax professionals such as attorneys and accountants who can handle many audit issues. Smaller companies and individuals usually rely on their tax return preparer, who can be a certified public accountant, an attorney, a preparer service or a registered return preparer. As the audit develops and issues are brought into focus, outside counsel is sometimes retained. If necessary, the IRS will assemble an audit team consisting of a lead agent, supporting speciality agents (possibly including international tax examiners if the audit raises cross-border issues) and an audit team manager. The taxpayer also requires a team to effectively respond to enquiries from the IRS audit team. Moreover, because it is now common for IRS LB&I audit teams to include IRS field counsel at the inception of the audit, taxpayers would be well advised to seek assistance of counsel (either in-house or external) to be prepared to respond in a careful and thoughtful manner to the IRS.

In late 2015, a high-level LB&I official announced the implementation of significant changes to the organisation and audit procedures of LB&I.<sup>10</sup> The new audit procedure will be ‘campaign’ focused, as opposed to traditional audits, which were driven by the size of the taxpayer under what was called the coordinated industry case (CIC) programme. The CIC programme has been superseded by the campaign method. At the division level, LB&I is looking at filing trends and deciding which issues pose the greatest risks of non-compliance. LB&I will then start audit ‘campaigns’ around these specific issues. Multiple campaigns can proceed simultaneously. So far, 13 campaign issues have been identified. International-related issues include inbound distributor transfer pricing, repatriation structures and non-filing of Form 1120-F US Income Tax Return of a Foreign Corporation.<sup>11</sup>

The IRS examines the return (in the case of a large taxpayer, returns for a two-year period or ‘cycle’) and verifies the accuracy of the taxpayer’s evaluation of its tax liability. On occasion, a taxpayer will amend the original return during the audit, seeking a refund based on further review of its return. Subject to certain procedural criteria set forth in IRS

9 Correspondence audits typically begin with the service centre notifying the taxpayer of proposed changes to the return, and a request for information to explain the return position or positions giving rise to the adjustments. The IRS never uses e-mail to inform a taxpayer of the commencement of an audit.

Publication 5125, the IRS agent may allow the claim at that time or defer consideration until the audit is complete. As noted above, some returns are merely informational returns. Nonetheless, these returns can also be subject to an audit. For example, if a law firm is considered a material adviser with respect to what is called a 'reportable transaction', the law firm must file an informational return with the IRS (Sections 6111 and 6112 of the Code). If the IRS wants to evaluate the accuracy of that filing, it can initiate an audit. Another example of informational returns that are regularly audited by the IRS are those filed by tax-exempt entities. Such entities generally file an annual return reflecting the various activities they undertook during the filing period. The IRS will look at the activities of the exempt entity to determine whether they are in keeping with its exempt purpose, and will also review activities that may have generated unrelated business income, which is taxable.

Audit ground rules

It is important to establish ground rules concerning the conduct of the audit. To the extent that a taxpayer can define the expectations of the audit, it can generally maintain a good relationship with the auditor and keep the audit moving at an efficient pace. In addition, initiation of an audit by the IRS does not mean that the IRS has free rein in the conduct of the audit; there are recognised procedures and limits to the IRS's examination authority.

For audits of any complexity, ground rules should be established at the preliminary conference that occurs after the audit initiation letter is received by the taxpayer. The ground rules should cover:

- a* who the designated taxpayer contacts are;
- b* how production and copying of documents occurs on site;
- c* the general logistics for delivery and response to IDRs, and the maintenance of IDR logs so that the taxpayer can confirm completion of responses to the IDRs;
- d* scheduling of meetings; and
- e* establishing a hotline between the taxpayer's supervisor and the manager of the revenue agent.

On occasion, there may be misunderstandings between the taxpayer and the lead revenue agent. In those circumstances, the taxpayer should be able to seek input from the audit team manager.

The LB&I Division has adopted certain protocols for the issuance of IDRs and the use of summonses to enforce information requested by IDRs. IRS Directive LB&I-04-0613-004, as clarified by Directives LB&I-04-1113-009 and LB&I-04-021-044, requires examining agents to follow certain graduated enforcement steps in the event that specific information requested through an IDR is not provided by the taxpayer in a timely manner. The agent has little discretion to vary from them. The steps are issuance of a notice of delinquency to the taxpayer; in the event that the information is not provided 15 days later, the agent issues a letter that warns the taxpayer of the preparation of a summons; and if the taxpayer does not respond within 10 days from the date of this letter, the agent must issue a summons.

The tax bar expressed concern about the mandatory nature of this Directive, especially in circumstances where the taxpayer encounters unforeseen difficulties in obtaining the information requested by the IDR or where the location of the information, such as overseas, makes it impossible to meet any pre-agreed IDR response date. However, since the implementation of these new IDR protocols, there have been no reported summonses or significant negative effects on LB&I audits. This is likely to be as a result of better communication between the taxpayer and the lead examining agent about what are realistic timelines for production of responses to IDRs, and the use of draft IDRs by the examining agent to prepare the taxpayer for the delivery of the formal IDR.

Form 8275 and Revenue Procedure 94-69 disclosures

A taxpayer has the option to attach Form 8275, 'disclosure statement', to its return. The Form discloses a particular position or positions taken by the taxpayer in the return, and in effect allows the taxpayer to notify the IRS that the IRS might disagree with one or more of its return positions. Such a disclosure's benefit is that it will prevent the IRS from asserting certain civil penalties against the taxpayer, specifically the Section 6662(b)(1) penalty for disregarding rules and regulations, and the substantial understatement penalty under Section 6662(b)(2).<sup>12</sup> It can be helpful in situations where the law is not clear on the propriety of the return position, and if the taxpayer otherwise has a reasonable basis for such a position. Should the IRS decide to audit a return that has one or more positions so disclosed, the taxpayer should be prepared for the IRS to focus its examination on those positions.

Under the prior CIC programme, taxpayers could make a similar kind of disclosure after the initiation of the audit. Pursuant to IRS Revenue Procedure 94-69 (31 October 1994), if a CIC taxpayer provided a statement to the IRS no later than 15 days after such a statement is requested by the IRS, the statement would be deemed to be a qualified amended return,<sup>13</sup> and no penalties under Section 6662(b)(1) or (b)(2) can be imposed. As a general matter, the IRS will request such a statement at the inception of the audit. With the change to 'campaign' audits, this entire disclosure procedure could be removed by the LB&I division of the IRS.

Statute of limitations

Under Section 6501(a) of the Code, the IRS has three years from the time a return is filed to assess any additional tax with respect to that return. Whenever an audit is commenced, it is important to confirm that the IRS still has the authority to actually assess a tax with respect to the year under audit. Normally, the IRS audit team has already reviewed the statute, but taxpayers should confirm this independently. In cases of substantial omission of gross income – defined as an amount in excess of 25 per cent of the gross income stated in the return – the statute of limitations is six years from the time of filing the return (see Section 6501(e) of the Code).<sup>14</sup> For fraudulent or false returns, the statute remains open indefinitely. The statute also remains open in cases where no return has been filed, and in other specified circumstances such as where forms identifying income items from controlled foreign corporations are not attached to the income tax return.

---

12 Treasury Regulation Sections 1.6662-3(c)(1)-(2) and 1.6662-4(e).

13 A qualified amended return normally must be filed prior to any contact by the IRS.

14 The United States Supreme Court in United States v. Home Concrete & Supply, LLC, 132 S Ct 1836 (2012), decided that Treasury Regulation Section 301.6501(e)-1(a)(iii) was invalid. This Regulation required overstatements of basis to be treated as substantial omissions of gross income under Section 6501(e) of the Code to the extent such overstatements resulted in a reduction of income exceeding 25 per cent of the reported gross income. Of particular importance was the fact that the Court chose not to defer to the Treasury Department's interpretation of the Code. Normally, Treasury Regulations are granted a high degree of deference by the courts.

If the IRS team determines that there is a year or less remaining on the statute for the return under audit, it will ask the taxpayer to consent to the extension of the statute through execution of Form 872. The request will be for a specific date in the future. As a general matter, it is prudent for taxpayers to sign these extension consents. If the IRS is faced with an expiring statute prior to the completion of the audit, it will be forced to consider issuing a protective notice of deficiency so that any potential tax collection is not lost. Protective deficiency notices are generally based on prior year return tax liabilities and adjusted upwards. As the audit progresses, if certain issues are not going to be challenged, the taxpayer may insist that an extension is limited only to specific audit issues. Form 872-R accomplishes this limited extension of the statute. As with all matters concerning the statute of limitations, a taxpayer should carefully consider its options before consenting to the extension.

IRS methods to obtain information during an audit

The IRS has several methods by which to obtain information from the taxpayer during an audit. The standard method is the information document request (IDR). Because of the broad investigative powers of the IRS, IDRs can request almost anything relating to a return position that assists the IRS in determining the accuracy of the return. The revenue agent will use Form 4564 to set forth specific questions and requests. An IDR can be used simply to pose a question (e.g., how many full-time employees did the taxpayer have during the taxable period?) As the audit proceeds, IDRs become more focused on the areas of concern to the IRS. The IRS may also ask for information informally, but for any material information, a taxpayer should make sure that this is requested through Form 4564. Generally, IDRs indicate a deadline for response. Taxpayers should make every effort to meet such deadlines, but in some cases the revenue agent may have requested a substantial amount of information that cannot be collected within the time frame specified. In those circumstances, a taxpayer should request additional time. A taxpayer is not required to create any new documents, such as a schedule of full-time employees, if one does not already exist. However, because it is important to maintain a positive relationship with the revenue agent, the taxpayer is sometimes well-advised to create such document to assist the agent in his or her review of information. An IDR may also request an interview with key taxpayer personnel or third parties to better understand the facts underlying a specific return position.

The IRS can also use extraordinary methods to obtain information from the taxpayer. Under Sections 7603, 7605 and 7609 of the Code, the IRS can issue summonses to compel taxpayers and third parties to provide information relevant to their audit. Taxpayers frequently dispute whether the IRS has such authority, even to the point of seeking a judicial resolution of whether the IRS summons is valid, but the US Supreme Court has acknowledged the broad authority of the IRS under these statutes.<sup>15</sup> Typically, the IRS does not use a summons unless the taxpayer has declined to provide information the IRS believes it needs for the 15 See United States v. Powell, 379 US 48 (1964) (establishing requirements of a valid summons). Arguments against the validity of a summons based on irrelevancy are routinely rejected by courts. The most successful oppositions to IRS summons rest on the protections of attorney–client privilege or work product. Cf. United States v. Clarke, 134 S Ct 2361 (2014) (acknowledging that a taxpayer ‘has a right to conduct [an evidentiary hearing] when he points to specific facts or circumstances plausibly raising an inference of bad faith’ in the issuance of a summons).

audit. Should a taxpayer continue to decline to provide the information sought by the summons, the IRS has the option to seek judicial relief through a summons enforcement action. The US Department of Justice Tax Division will file the action on behalf of the IRS in the federal district court where the taxpayer resides or has its principal place of business. The taxpayer must be prepared to answer in court to justify its decision not to provide the requested information.

There are two special types of document requests that the IRS can use against the taxpayer:

- a* a designated summons, authorised by Section 6503(j) of the Code, the primary effect of which is to toll the statute of limitations while the IRS waits for the information requested in the summons; and
- b* a formal document request authorised by Section 982(c) of the Code. A formal document request enables the IRS to foreclose the taxpayer from using foreign-based documents in litigation that were subject to the request and not provided to the IRS during the audit.

Finally, the IRS can use its summons power against third-party record keepers, such as banks or other financial institutions, under Section 7609 of the Code. A third party may hold critical information, and may not object to a summons simply because the audit does not pertain to its liability. However, unlike the taxpayer, a third party can make a reasonable objection based on economic burden to comply with the summons, and should consider raising any such concerns with the revenue agent. The IRS does not generally have the authority to enforce a summons outside the jurisdiction of the United States.<sup>16</sup>

Should the return selected for audit involve a 'listed transaction' (i.e., a transaction that the IRS considers to be potentially abusive tax avoidance), the audit will generally be much more aggressive, and is likely to include third-party summonses, testimony under oath and attacks on privilege claims.

Responding to IRS requests in audits

As a general rule, it is preferable to provide the IRS with the information requested through IDRs rather than not providing any information and forcing the IRS to decide whether to use its summons power. The key to the successful conclusion of an audit is a good working relationship with the IRS audit team. With the exception of requests that seek protected or privileged information, or that would entail an unnecessary and excessive compliance burden, taxpayers should promptly and professionally reply to each IDR presented by the IRS.

It is therefore wise for taxpayers to review each request, and to clarify the meaning of any language and the scope of the request. For example, a request might be for all corporate minutes without any qualifications; in such circumstance, it is perfectly acceptable to ask the IRS for a date range and also for some specificity regarding what topics in the minutes are of interest. It is also important to review response materials for completeness and accuracy. Legitimate requests for relevant, unprotected information should generally be complied with through a written response.

Protected information

Taxpayers (even experienced corporate tax departments) can be careless in including privileged or other protected information in files that may be produced to the IRS. In the United States, there are several acknowledged protections that cannot be overcome by the IRS, despite its broad summons authority.

The first is attorney–client privilege, which prevents any communication between the client and its attorney in connection with legal advice from being discovered by the IRS.

A second kind of protection is the attorney work-product doctrine. Documents created in anticipation of litigation or trial are generally protected by this doctrine. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and federal case law have expanded the doctrine to include non-attorney representatives of a party, such as accountants or consultants. Thus, if a taxpayer has engaged a tax accountant to assist it in evaluating the strengths of its tax return position with a view to future litigation with the IRS, the evaluation created by the tax accountant would be protected under this doctrine.

A third type of protection is a statutory privilege under Section 7525 of the Code. Section 7525, in effect, imports the common law protections of the attorney–client privilege into the tax adviser–client relationship, regardless of whether the adviser is an attorney. The adviser must be a federally authorised tax practitioner (including, e.g., certified public accountants). The Section 7525 privilege thus protects communications between tax advisers and taxpayers in connection with tax advice. There are certain important limitations to this statutory privilege. It does not protect communications made in connection with the promotion of a tax shelter. Nor does it apply in the context of criminal tax proceedings. Both the attorney–client and Section 7525 privileges can be waived, however, if the communication is disclosed to third parties.

Finally, the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution prevents the government from compelling a taxpayer to make statements that could be viewed as an admission of criminal guilt.

Corporate tax accrual workpapers

A significant current issue for corporate taxpayers involves whether their internal tax accrual workpapers can be protected from IRS scrutiny under the work-product doctrine. Workpapers typically contain sensitive tax analysis regarding the strengths of a particular tax position that a company has adopted in its return. Thus, most corporate taxpayers are not enthusiastic about providing their workpapers to the IRS. Often the workpapers are provided to a company's external financial auditors, thereby waiving any attorney–client or Section 7525 privilege that might have protected them. Nonetheless, because such workpapers contain analysis regarding the litigation hazards of a particular tax return position, corporations have taken the position that they are work product (as this protection generally is not waived upon disclosure to outside financial auditors). As a general matter, the IRS does not ask for these documents. This is known as the 'policy of restraint'.<sup>17</sup> Nevertheless, the IRS maintains that it has the authority to request these documents, and has litigated the issue and prevailed in one federal circuit.<sup>18</sup>

17 See IRS Announcement 2010-76 (24 September 2010).

Negotiating and closing an audit

As a general matter, revenue agents do not have authority to settle issues based on litigation risks. Nevertheless, there are opportunities during the audit to come to an agreement about what an adjustment should be. For example, where the proposed adjustment depends upon the valuation of certain minority interests in stock, it is possible to reach an agreement with the IRS audit team as to the proper discount value applied to determine the valuation of the stock and thereby agree on a valuation. Taxpayers should therefore apply creative thinking about how to come to a mutually acceptable resolution of an audit consistent with the general limitation on the audit team's settlement authority.

At the close of the audit there are several possible outcomes:

- a* if the IRS agrees with the taxpayer's return, it will issue a 'no change' letter, and the return is accepted as filed;
- b* if the IRS has proposed adjustments with which the taxpayer agrees, the audit will be closed as an 'agreed' case, and the tax liability is adjusted accordingly;
- c* a taxpayer may disagree with all of the proposed adjustments, in which case the audit is closed as 'unagreed', and the revenue agent will prepare a revenue agent's report (RAR), which is delivered to the taxpayer under cover of a transmittal letter allowing the taxpayer 30 days within which to file a protest letter with the IRS Office of Appeals (Appeals); or
- d* a case might be partially agreed. In that event, the revenue agent will issue an RAR covering the unagreed issues.

It is important to bear in mind that if the RAR contains material errors, a taxpayer may find it fruitful to make another attempt at 'agreed' resolution of the issues affected by such errors. A taxpayer should consider preparing a written submission to the IRS audit team detailing the errors, and requesting either a retraction of the RAR, or a modified RAR that reflects the correct factual or legal circumstances. Given that revenue agents are increasingly imposing penalties along with tax adjustments, the possibility that such penalties are based on flimsy or erroneous grounds similarly increases. Every effort should be made to persuade the revenue agent to reconsider penalties prior to proceeding to Appeals.

Appeals

Appeals is the official settlement arm of the IRS for disputes arising from audits.<sup>19</sup> It is staffed by appeals officers located in 11 appeals offices throughout the country. The Chief of Appeals, located in the IRS National Office in Washington, DC, is the top IRS appeals executive, and is assisted by the Deputy Chief of Appeals in his or her duties. The mission of the Appeals Office is '[T]o resolve tax controversies, without litigation, on a basis which is fair and impartial to both the government and the taxpayer in a manner that will enhance voluntary compliance and public confidence in the integrity and efficiency of the Service'. An litigation'). But see United States v. Deloitte, LLP, 610 F.3d129 (DC CIR. 2010) and Wells Fargo and Company v. United States, 2013-1 USTC Paragraph 50368 (D Minn 2013) (both recognising limits on IRS summons authority).

19 For disputes with the IRS that have been filed in court, Appeals has no official settlement role (apart from Tax Court cases that have not previously been before Appeals, which are immediately referred to Appeals after the petition is filed in the Tax Court).

appeals officer is charged with making an objective evaluation of the taxpayer's case based on the hazards of litigation. Importantly, the Appeals Office is independent from the IRS audit team that has proposed the adjustments.<sup>20</sup>

An appeals officer learns of the taxpayer's position regarding the proposed adjustments primarily through the taxpayer's protest letter. Although the IRS provides Form 12203 to prepare a protest to the appeals office, most practitioners opt to draft a letter that contains the necessary information and explains the taxpayer's position in a manner similar to that in which a legal brief sets out the facts and supporting legal analysis before a court. The protest letter is addressed to the IRS audit team supervisor. The IRS audit team then forwards the protest letter to the appropriate appeals office, along with the audit team's written rebuttal to the protest letter.<sup>21</sup> Thus, it is possible that the IRS audit team, upon review of the protest letter, may change its legal analysis to respond to the taxpayer's argument, or may in fact be persuaded to concede certain issues.

Appeals review is an informal consideration of the contrasting positions. There is no testimony or formal hearing process. Instead, the appeals officer will convene a series of meetings to assist the officer in evaluating the litigation risks for both sides.<sup>22</sup> These meetings may be by telephone or in person. The first (pre-conference) meeting allows the IRS audit team to explain its position on the various adjustments that it proposes. IRS field counsel are likely to assist in that presentation. Because an appeals officer may not have ex parte communications with the audit team, a taxpayer must be allowed to attend this meeting.

After the pre-conference, the IRS audit team plays no further role in the appeals officer's consideration of the case. The second (conference) meeting is between the appeals officer, the taxpayer, and his or her representatives. The taxpayer always has the option to request that this be an in-person meeting. Depending upon the complexity of the case, the taxpayer may be invited to present its side of the case, reviewing the facts and the applicable law. Afterwards, the appeals officer will engage in a discussion of the case and the merits of both sides. It is at this juncture that settlement negotiations will occur in an effort to resolve the matter. This appeals procedure is highly successful: over 90 per cent of all cases before Appeals are settled.

Appeals has developed what is called the appeals judicial approach and culture (AJAC) project to make appeals more like an appellate judicial review function. Under AJAC,

20 As noted in the instructions to Form 12203, 'Request for Review' (which is a form version of the protest letter): 'The local Appeals Office is separate from and independent of the IRS office that proposed the adjustment.'

21 The taxpayer is entitled to request an Appeals review in a location that is convenient to the taxpayer. However, Appeals may instead decide to assign the case to an appeals officer with particular expertise regarding the issues raised by the RAR and the protest letter, or may in fact decline to have any in-person meeting based on factors such as resources and the complexity of the case. See IRM 8.6.1.4.1 (10-01-2016) (describing factors Appeals will consider in determining whether to conduct an in-person conference). In that event, the Appeals review would be conducted through telephone and mail.

22 If the case involves particularly technical or significant issues, such as transfer pricing or insurance tax issues, Appeals may assign an appeals case team to review the case, and include appeals officers with expertise in those issues on such a team. The appeals case team is led by an appeals case team leader known as an ATCL.

appeals will not find facts. Thus, new facts raised by a taxpayer with an appeals officer will be presented to the audit team for a response. If a taxpayer raises a new theory with Appeals, the appeals officer will also seek the audit team's response.

Mediation is available if the normal appeals consideration does not result in a resolution. The mediator is another appeals officer. The taxpayer may add another mediator of his or her own selection. Post-appeals mediation is voluntary. See Revenue Procedure 2014-63.

If, after settlement discussions, the taxpayer and the appeals officer agree on a resolution, Appeals will prepare an internal memorandum to record the analysis of the case, and for approval by his or her supervisor. The appeals officer will then prepare either a Form 870-AD or a closing agreement for the taxpayer that contractually binds the taxpayer and the IRS to the terms of the settlement.<sup>23</sup> If no settlement is reached, the appeals officer will prepare either a statutory notice of deficiency, giving the taxpayer the opportunity to seek relief in the US Tax Court, or a Form 870, which obtains the taxpayer's consent to the immediate assessment and collection of any tax due. Most taxpayers will elect to receive a statutory notice of deficiency. However, some may wish to pursue their case in court after payment of taxes, and so will request a Form 870, pay the tax due and begin proceedings for filing a tax refund action.

III THE COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

If efforts to resolve an issue within the administrative apparatus of the IRS have failed, a taxpayer has the option to file suit in federal court. A taxpayer thus is able to have its 'day in court' on the tax issue that the IRS has raised. As a matter of jurisdiction, there are four potential judicial venues in which to raise a federal tax claim: the US Tax Court, the US Court of Federal Claims, a federal district court or a bankruptcy court.

i Choice of forum

With the exception of the Tax Court, the above-mentioned courts hear tax cases just as they hear any other dispute that comes before them. They follow the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (or similar versions of those rules) and apply the Federal Rules of Evidence at trial. They allow for a full range of discovery of the IRS, dispositive motions, oral arguments, motions in limine and trial, as well as all post-trial procedures, including appeal rights to a federal appellate court, and thereafter the ability to petition the court of last resort, the US Supreme Court.<sup>24</sup>

The Tax Court is a court of singular subject-matter jurisdiction (i.e., federal tax deficiency cases), and has some different rules of litigation; however, for the most part it operates just as the other courts with respect to discovery, motions and litigation. For some taxpayers, the US Tax Court is not available simply because they are not seeking to avoid payment of tax asserted to be due, but to force the IRS to repay tax they believe is

23 Form 906, 'Closing Agreement on Final Determination Covering Specific Matters', will bind the IRS and the taxpayer except where there has been fraud, malfeasance or misrepresentation of material facts.

24 While there is a right to appeal to the federal appellate court, there is no right of appeal to the US Supreme Court for tax cases. The Supreme Court takes these cases in its sole discretion.

overpaid. Thus, the only courts available to these taxpayers are the 'refund' courts (i.e., federal district courts or the US Court of Federal Claims). However, taxpayers who face proposed tax assessments after audit can choose between the US Tax Court and the refund courts. There are several points to consider when deciding which judicial venue is the best to hear a taxpayer's case:

- a* which forum has the most favourable precedent;
- b* what the comparative cost differences are, other than the fact that payment of taxes (and possibly interest and penalties) is required to obtain refund jurisdiction;
- c* which forum offers the best opportunity to settle early and favourably;
- d* where the taxpayer is most likely to prevail in trial; and
- e* where the taxpayer is most likely to prevail upon appeal, if necessary.

The specific circumstances of the case and issues involved will, of course, affect the answer to some of these questions. Thus, where the precedent gives a distinct advantage on the merits of the issues, this will improve the chances of settlement in that forum and the chances of prevailing in litigation. The US Tax Court may have more or less favourable case law than the refund courts. On the other hand, the US Court of Federal Claims, a tribunal separate from the federal district courts, may have the most beneficial case law. A taxpayer should retain counsel to carefully analyse the applicable precedent in each forum, as this is one of the most important factors to consider in choice of forum.

ii Comparison of costs

The largest cost factor in any litigation is legal fees. The largest cost factor within those fees for large tax cases is the discovery phase of litigation. In general, the Tax Court rules encourage less formal discovery, and encourage stipulation to the greatest extent possible. Refund courts allow for broad-ranging discovery, including liberal use of depositions, as a way for the parties to gauge the other's case and to discover additional facts. Thus, on this basis the Tax Court overall typically incurs fewer legal fees. However, where a case is particularly contentious or involves large amounts or significant tax issues, this potential cost advantage of the Tax Court decreases because the parties will be less willing to resort to informal exchange of discovery and stipulation of facts.

Another cost factor relates to the procedural requirements leading up to the filing of suit, where the Tax Court is generally less costly. Tax Court jurisdiction depends upon receipt of the statutory notice of deficiency. This notice gives a taxpayer 90 days within which to file a petition in the Tax Court seeking redetermination of the proposed deficiency.<sup>25</sup> Refund court jurisdiction requires several steps. First, a taxpayer must pay the tax asserted to be due. (In jurisdictions other than the Federal Circuit, this will require payment of any assessed penalties and interest.) This amount is determined after audit and reflected on Form 870, which is signed by the taxpayer and which also waives a taxpayer's right to petition the Tax Court.<sup>26</sup> Form 870 records the taxpayer's consent to immediate assessment of the taxes.

25 Depending upon the complexity of the case, Appeals may take several weeks to draft and issue the deficiency notice. Further delaying the issuance of a notice is the practice for review and concurrence by IRS counsel.

26 Although the Federal Circuit (which hears appeals from the US Court of Federal Claims) does not require separate payment of assessed interest for jurisdictional purposes, the IRS is Second, the taxpayer must file a claim for refund within two years from the time of payment. Third, the IRS disallows the claim or fails to act on the claim within six months of the filing of the claim for refund. A taxpayer then has two years from the date of disallowance of the refund claim to file suit in a refund court such as the US Court of Federal Claims or a federal district court located in the appropriate venue.<sup>27</sup> Because the costs involved in preparing a Tax Court petition and a complaint in refund court are comparable, the more streamlined process for reaching the Tax Court will incur fewer fees overall.

A further cost is interest. Because the Tax Court does not require prepayment of the asserted taxes, interest continues to run on the deficient amount until resolution of the case. However, in the refund court, because payment, including assessed interest, must be made prior to suit, interest does not run. Any repayment of taxes to the taxpayer as a result of the litigation will come with interest paid by the government. To some extent, the interest factor can be ameliorated through the expedient of a deposit. The IRS has established procedures by which a taxpayer can deposit (not pay) an amount with the IRS to cover a proposed tax deficiency should that tax deficiency be upheld by the appeals office. See Revenue Procedure 2005–13.

Finally, if the taxpayer loses in the Tax Court, taxes (and interest and penalties) must be paid to appeal the Tax Court decision or a bond must be posted. Since posting a bond is more expensive, it is rarely the option chosen.

iii Settlement opportunities

Settlement in the Tax Court and the refund courts is not uncommon. However, as a general matter, settlement discussions can take place at an earlier stage in the Tax Court than in the refund courts. In the refund courts, the Department of Justice Tax Division, not the IRS, controls the litigation. Litigators at the Justice Department typically seek substantial discovery, including depositions of key taxpayer witnesses, prior to entering into meaningful settlement discussions with a taxpayer. In the Tax Court, the IRS typically does not require significant discovery before consideration of settlement.

One factor that may weigh against selecting the Tax Court is the potential involvement of the IRS audit team. The extent to which IRS personnel who have been involved in a case while in audit will influence any resolution by settlement is probably greater in the Tax Court than in a refund court. Typically, in a refund court the Department of Justice attorney will be the first-line person to evaluate the litigation hazards, and will operate independently of IRS not prevented from pursuing collection of any assessed unpaid item, including interest. It is possible, but unlikely, that the IRS would agree to defer collection of assessed interest and instead instruct the Department of Justice Tax Division to counterclaim for that amount in court.

27 Arguably, if the IRS does not formally disallow the refund claim there is no limitations period within which to file suit. Although the IRS may argue that a more general six-year statute of limitations applies for claims against the United States. A taxpayer may request an immediate disallowance of a refund claim and thereby accelerate the beginning of this two-year period. If possible, taxpayers should time the filing of suit to coincide with the expiration of the statute of limitations for assessment to prevent the IRS from asserting any new tax issues (and assessments) in court.

personnel with regard to the conduct of the litigation.<sup>28</sup> However, in a Tax Court proceeding, IRS personnel who were involved during the audit phase may in fact be assigned to the case in Tax Court, or act in some consultative capacity to the IRS trial team. If the IRS audit team was generally hostile, it would be reasonable to presume that this attitude might carry over into the IRS trial attorney's consideration, and thereby decrease the chances of a reasonable settlement discussion.

IV PENALTIES AND REMEDIES

The Code imposes both civil and criminal penalties. Civil penalties are located in Chapter 68, Sections 6651–6751. Criminal penalties are set forth in Chapter 75, Sections 7201–7217. Civil penalties generally are designed to encourage compliance with filing and payment deadlines, and to encourage accurate reporting of taxes and information. Criminal penalties also encourage proper reporting, but go further by punishing through fines and incarceration. As with the charge of any crime in the United States, the element of mens rea (i.e., intent) must be established by the government beyond a reasonable doubt to impose a criminal tax penalty.

i Civil penalties

Civil tax penalties are numerous. They include:

- a* an estimated tax penalty (Sections 6654, 6655) for failure to properly estimate and pay tax due throughout the taxable year;
- b* delinquency penalties (Section 6651) for failure to file timely returns and pay tax due;
- c* accuracy-related penalties (Sections 6662, 6662A) for failure to accurately report items on a return;
- d* penalties relating to fraud (Section 6663);
- e* a variety of information return penalties (Section 6652, 6721–6725) for failures to accurately or promptly report required information; and
- f* abusive tax shelter penalties (Sections 6662A, 6700–6703, 6707–6708).

Certain penalties, such as the estimated tax and delinquency penalty, are often imposed by the IRS service centre. As a general matter, accuracy-related penalties are imposed after IRS examination. Taxpayers are always afforded the opportunity to rebut the imposition of penalties either at the examination (or service centre) or Appeals level. Unresolved disputes concerning penalties, such as disputes about taxes, can be litigated in the various judicial fora.

Taxpayers can avoid the imposition of most civil penalties through a showing of reasonable cause. If a taxpayer can show that he or she acted with ordinary business care and prudence in the filing and preparation of his or her return, he or she will generally be able to show reasonable cause.<sup>29</sup> Reliance upon a tax adviser can constitute reasonable cause where

28 As the client agency, the IRS routinely indicates whether the Department of Justice must consult with it prior to settling any case.

29 For example, Treasury Regulation Section 301.6651-1(c), which sets forth this standard for delinquency penalties, provides: 'If the taxpayer exercised ordinary business care and prudence and was nevertheless unable to file the return within the prescribed time, then the delay is due to a reasonable cause.' It is important to note, however, that for filing deadlines, a taxpayer the IRS disagrees with a return position. In that case, the IRS will review a number of factors, including whether the taxpayer acted in good faith by providing his or her adviser with all necessary information and whether the proposed return position was ‘too good to be true’.<sup>30</sup> One notable exception is the relatively new accuracy-related penalty in Section 6662(b)(6) for underpayments of tax due to a failure to meet the economic substance requirements set forth in Section 7701(o). There is no reasonable cause defence for this penalty.

ii Criminal penalties

Most tax criminals are guilty of tax evasion under Section 7201.<sup>31</sup>

The basic elements of tax evasion are the existence of a tax deficiency, an affirmative act constituting an evasion or an attempted evasion of the tax, and wilfulness. Evading payment of an income tax can be accomplished even when a taxpayer reports all taxable income on his or her return. A good faith misunderstanding of the law is a defence to a tax crime.

Good faith reliance on the advice of counsel or an expert tax preparer, after complete disclosure of all relevant facts to the tax adviser, is also a defence to the crime.

Other tax crimes are those:

- a* regarding collection or payment of tax (Section 7202);
- b* regarding filing, payment or supplying information (Section 7203);
- c* regarding making of fraudulent and false statements (Section 7206);
- d* regarding delivery or disclosure of fraudulent or false return, statements or other documents (Section 7207); and
- e* interference with revenue laws (Section 7212).

V TAX CLAIMS

i Recovering overpaid tax

A claim for refund of income taxes is essentially an amended tax return. In the same manner as an original tax return, a claim for refund can be subject to an examination by the IRS. Should the IRS disagree with the claim, and the taxpayer is unable to resolve the claim administratively, the taxpayer has the option to file an action for tax refund in a federal district court or the US Court of Federal Claims. These are collectively known as ‘refund courts’.

cannot delegate his or her duty to file on time to a tax return preparer. See United States v. Boyle, 69 US 241 (1985) (finding a penalty applied where the estate executor simply relied on the return preparer to file on time). For accuracy-related penalties, Section 6664(c) similarly provides that no penalty shall be imposed if it is shown that there was a reasonable cause for the inaccurate portion of the return and that the taxpayer acted in good faith with respect to that portion.

30 Treasury Regulation Section 1.6664-4(c).

31 Section 7201 states: ‘Any person who wilfully attempts in any manner to evade or defeat any tax imposed by this title or the payment thereof shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $100,000 ($500,000 in the case of a corporation), or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.’

Taxpayers seeking a refund from the IRS must ensure that they abide by the statute of limitations for making a refund claim. Section 6511 of the Code provides generally that a refund claim must be made within three years from the time the return is filed or within two years from the time that the tax sought to be recovered is paid. Failure to meet this time frame means an otherwise valid refund claim is forever barred, unless very specific mitigation criteria are met that allow for the assertion of an otherwise barred claim.

There are two more critical timing considerations, even if a refund claim is filed on time. Once the refund claim is filed, the taxpayer must wait six months before filing suit in a refund court. Attempts to file suit before this period has run will result in a dismissal of the lawsuit for lack of jurisdiction. Further, once the IRS formally disallows the refund claim under Section 6532(a), the taxpayer has two years within which to file suit. While the IRS and the taxpayer can agree to extend this period, once that period expires, no court has jurisdiction to hear the taxpayer's refund claim.

ii Challenging administrative decisions

Taxpayers are always able to challenge IRS administrative decisions based on substantive and procedural grounds.

To the extent that a decision of the IRS is based on a statute and that decision is contrary to the intent or policy of the statute, then a taxpayer can make an effective argument to invalidate the decision. The IRS's formal decisions, as embodied in Treasury regulations, are accorded a high degree of deference by the courts, and taxpayers typically are hard-pressed to persuade a court to invalidate a Treasury regulation unless there is a clear case that the regulation contravenes the statute's language or purpose. Other, less formal, decisions, however, are not accorded such deference, and the taxpayer can argue with relatively increased success that these decisions should be disregarded because they are inconsistent with the relevant statutory framework. Mere arguments as to what is better tax policy will never be particularly effective, because the revenue agency is presumptively the best determiner of tax policy. Nonetheless, some courts have rejected proposed IRS actions based on the theory that the agency should be treating similarly situated taxpayers in a similar manner. Thus, where there is disparate treatment among similarly situated taxpayers, courts have held that the IRS action against the complaining taxpayer is invalid.<sup>32</sup>

Furthermore, all federal agency action is subject to federal statutory administrative law provisions. Pursuant to those provisions, courts are empowered to reject certain types of agency action where the agency acts in a way that is 'arbitrary and capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with the law'.<sup>33</sup> Courts sometimes disregard the IRS's exercise of its discretion based on this standard, such as in the transfer pricing context.<sup>34</sup> However, whether all IRS actions are subject to this standard is somewhat unclear. Regulations can be subject to challenges under federal administrative law. In 2015, the IRS

32 See IBM Corp v. United States, 343 F2d 914 (Ct Cl 1965), cert denied, 382 US 1028 (1966).

33 Final agency action is generally subject to review under this standard pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946, PubL 79-404, 60 Stat237.

34 Most recently the IRS lost in Medtronic, Inc v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2016-112, in which the Tax Court found that the IRS had arbitrarily and capriciously rejected certain key evidence regarding the role of the taxpayer's Puerto Rican subsidiary in the manufacture of medical devices.

lost a high-profile case in which the taxpayer challenged certain Treasury regulations that required sharing of equity-based compensation costs in connection with transfer pricing arrangements. The Tax Court decided that the Treasury Department and the IRS did not adhere to required procedures involving solicitation and response to comments to the proposed regulations, and did not substantiate its rules with factual support.<sup>35</sup>

With regard to constitutional challenges, in the context of state tax rules and actions taxpayers are sometimes successful. Taxpayers have successfully argued, for example, that a particular state taxation regime violates what is known as the doctrine of the 'dormant' commerce clause of the Constitution. This doctrine prevents state and local tax authorities from unfairly discriminating against other states' commerce. However, constitutional arguments against the imposition and collection of federal tax have been repeatedly rejected by the Supreme Court.

With respect to disputes before the IRS Appeals Office, the IRS takes the position that it has no authority to settle cases where the taxpayer has refused to comply with the tax law because of moral, religious, political, conscientious or constitutional grounds.<sup>36</sup>

iii Claimants

As noted, a taxpayer must file a claim for refund of income taxes with the IRS to pursue a tax claim. Assignment of refund claims to a third party, for example, in the context of a sale of the taxpayer's business, does not give standing to the third party. In informal guidance from the Chief Counsel, a taxpayer's attempt to direct refund cheques to its purchaser failed. IRS issues are funded only to the person who overpaid and filed the refund claim. Citing the Anti-Assignment Act, the Chief Counsel stated that a claim against the government can be assigned only after the claim is allowed, the amount is decided and a warrant for payment is issued, none of which occurred before the taxpayer sold its refund claims to the buyer.<sup>37</sup>

With respect to excise taxes, there are specific statutory rules governing who has standing to file a claim for a refund. Depending upon the particular excise tax, standing may be limited to the person responsible for the payment of the taxes, or may include third parties such as those who bore the economic incidence of the tax, upon their satisfaction of certain procedural requirements.

VI COSTS

i Recovery of administrative and litigation costs

A taxpayer's ability to recover costs incurred in the administrative or litigation phase of a federal tax dispute is circumscribed by Section 7430 of the Code, which provides that a taxpayer who is the prevailing party in any administrative or court proceeding may be awarded a judgment for 'reasonable administrative costs incurred in connection with administrative proceedings within the Internal Revenue Service, and reasonable litigation costs incurred in connection with court proceedings'.

35 See Alterra Corp v. Commissioner, 145 TC No. 3 (2015), appeal pending.

36 Treasury Regulation Section 601.106(b).

37 Chief Counsel Advice 201111005.

The statute defines ‘prevailing party’ as a taxpayer who substantially prevails as to the amount in controversy or with respect to the most significant issue or set of issues.<sup>38</sup> However, if the government can establish substantial justification for its position, no costs can be awarded. The government has substantial justification for its position if it has a reasonable basis in both law and fact. A further test to show substantial justification is whether the government’s basis could satisfy a reasonable person. A taxpayer cannot be a prevailing party if it does not meet the net worth requirements of 28 USC, Section 2412(d)(1)(B).

The position of the government in the litigation context is what is set forth in the answer to the complaint (refund court) or the petition (Tax Court). The position of the government in the administrative context is the position of the government as of the earlier of the date of the statutory notice of deficiency or the receipt by the taxpayer of notice of the decision of Appeals.

Both the Code and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allow for sanctions against taxpayers and awards of costs in favour of the IRS.

Section 6673 authorises a court to award sanctions and costs against taxpayers in favour of the IRS. There are three types of actions that can be taken pursuant to this Section 6673. First, the Tax Court can penalise a taxpayer up to US$25,000 for instituting Tax Court proceedings primarily for delay or to advance a frivolous position, or without utilising administrative remedies. Secondly, the Tax Court can impose sanctions directly against an attorney for action that ‘multiplied the proceedings [...] unreasonably and vexatiously’. Thirdly, any other federal court can impose a penalty of up to US$10,000 against a taxpayer pursuing a ‘frivolous or groundless’ proceeding under Section 7433, which authorises civil damage actions against the United States with respect to illegal collection actions of the IRS.<sup>39</sup>

Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure authorises federal district courts to impose sanctions on parties and attorneys where they have signed pleadings that are not ‘well grounded in fact’, or not ‘warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification or reversal of existing law.’ Rule 11 can support an award against the taxpayer for costs and other sanctions.<sup>40</sup>

i ADR within the IRS

In addition to the ordinary audit and appeals process discussed in Section II, supra, the IRS has instituted several ADR methods. All methods require the consent of both the taxpayer and the IRS.

The more widely used methods are fast-track settlement and post-appeals mediation. Fast-track settlement involves an appeals officer mediating a dispute between the taxpayer 38 See Section 7430(c)(4)(A)(i); Treasury Regulation Section 301.7430-5(a)(2).

39 In addition, Section 7482(c)(4) allows a federal court of appeals or the US Supreme Court to impose a penalty on the taxpayer where the appeal was taken primarily for delay, or where the taxpayer’s position on appeal is frivolous or groundless.

40 The US Court of Federal Claims and the Tax Court have similar rules. Under Rule 33(b), the Tax Court has awarded reasonable attorneys’ fees. See Versteeg v. Commissioner, 91 TC339 (1988).

and the revenue agent. Post-appeals mediation involves the use of co-mediators to help the taxpayer and the appeals officer to reach agreement. Both methods can be effective, and should be considered by taxpayers in the appropriate circumstances.

ii ADR in the courts

ADR is also available in all the courts where a civil tax case might be heard. The ADR methods are fairly similar from court to court. As is the case with the rise of ADR generally in the United States, the advent of ADR in tax cases is explained by increasing litigation costs. Taxpayers should always consider using ADR, preferably even before the case is filed.

Tax Court ADR

As already noted, where a case has not already been reviewed by Appeals, it will be automatically referred to Appeals by the Tax Court for settlement.<sup>41</sup>

Tax Court Rule 124, 'Alternative Dispute Resolution', became effective in May 2011. The goal of ADR in the Tax Court is to resolve any factual issue in controversy and takes several forms: voluntary binding arbitration (Rule 124(a)), voluntary non-binding mediation (Rule 124(b)) and a more general category of 'other methods' (Rule 124(c)).

ADR in the US Court of Federal Claims

The Court of Federal Claims hears several kinds of cases against the government, including constitutional takings, government contract disputes, military pay disputes and tax refund actions. Through its General Order No. 44, it has established and encouraged the use of ADR for any of these cases by automatically referring certain cases assigned to a roster of judges to a settlement judge, where ADR and settlement proceedings are held in parallel with normal litigation proceedings of the case. Under Appendix H of the Rules of the Court, there are several types of ADR method: mediation, mini-trials, early neutral evaluation and non-binding arbitration. The settlement judge can act as a mediator or third-party neutral, or even conduct a mini-trial whereby the parties can obtain insight into how a fully litigated case might be resolved. In no case are parties compelled to pursue ADR, and any case, whether automatically referred to a settlement judge or not, can take advantage of ADR. While it is available and encouraged, ADR is not widely used in tax refund actions.

ADR in the federal district courts

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure govern all federal district courts. Rule 26(f)(2) imposes a 'meet and confer' requirement on all parties to civil actions. The purpose of this rule is to facilitate settlement discussions between the parties at an early stage. Based on this rule, the district courts are construed with authority to establish and encourage the use of ADR methods.

Because each district can decide to what extent it wishes to employ ADR methods, ADR in the district courts is not uniform. For example, in the Southern District of New York, mediation is the only ADR method. In the Western District of Pennsylvania, Local Rule 16.2 sets out rules for mediation, early neutral evaluation and arbitration. In the Eastern 41 Treasury Regulation Section 601.106(a)(1)-(2).

District of Tennessee, in addition to these methods, the court requires mandatory mediation under Local Rule 16.4. The Eastern District of California is one of the most expansive of all district courts; under its Local Rule 16-271, all ADR methods are allowed.

VIII ANTI-AVOIDANCE

Generally applicable rules of anti-avoidance in the United States are judicial or ‘common law’ in origin. The doctrines of economic substance, the sham transaction doctrine and step transaction are applied in tax cases throughout the nation’s federal courts. During examination, the IRS will also consider the application of these rules in the appropriate circumstances. In 2010, Congress passed legislation that codified the economic substance doctrine.

The economic substance doctrine states that every transaction that reaps tax benefits must be scrutinised to evaluate whether sufficient non-tax purpose attends the transaction. If a taxpayer engages in a transaction that has no non-tax purpose and is solely to obtain tax benefits, a court can reject the desired tax benefits. Such a transaction might be termed an economic ‘sham’. The courts have not been uniform in whether a taxpayer’s subjective intent regarding its business purpose is enough to defeat the application of the doctrine. Nevertheless, the absence or presence of a pre-tax profit is one factor courts almost uniformly consider in evaluating the economic substance of a transaction that purports to be a profit-making endeavour. There are certain fundamental exceptions to the broad application of this doctrine. For example, a taxpayer whose sole purpose in selling stockholdings is to realise tax losses to offset gains in the taxable year cannot be attacked on the basis of the economic substance doctrine. Another example is where Congress has explicitly conferred tax benefits on a particular transaction to encourage a certain activity or investment. In these situations, a taxpayer should not be treated as illegally avoiding taxes where the legislature has specifically allowed for such activity.<sup>42</sup> Furthermore, in the context of corporate acquisitions or reorganisations, it is common to structure a transaction in a certain way so as to minimise the tax liability.

With the codification of the economic substance doctrine in 2010, transactions must now pass both an objective and subjective test. Section 1409 of the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act of 2010<sup>43</sup> added Section 7701(o), which codified the doctrine and incorporated new penalty provisions (discussed above). Under Section 7701(o), a taxpayer must ensure that a transaction produces economically meaningful changes (apart from federal income tax effects) and is infused with substantial non-tax purpose (apart from federal income tax effects). The statute provides special rules where pre-tax potential is a factor in the transaction.<sup>44</sup>

The step-transaction doctrine states that the tax benefits of a transaction can be limited to the substance of the transaction versus its form. Thus, if a taxpayer, in structuring an otherwise bona fide business transaction, includes a step that is not necessary to effect the transaction for the purpose of gaining a tax benefit, that step can be ignored by the courts. Another way of looking at the application of the doctrine is that it allows for the ‘stepping 43 Pub L No. 111-152.

44 Due to its relative newness, this statutory economic substance rule has not yet been substantively applied in any reported decisions.

together' of all of the parts of a transaction to ascertain its true nature.<sup>45</sup> For example, where a parent corporation sold the built-in loss assets of its subsidiary, thereby generating a tax loss, and then shortly thereafter repurchased most of those assets, the transaction is recast as a non-taxable liquidation, and the claimed tax loss is denied consistent with that recharacterisation.<sup>46</sup>

Borrowing from these common law general anti-avoidance rules, the IRS and the Treasury have developed anti-abuse rules specific to partnerships. These rules, set forth in Treasury Regulation Section 1.701-2, focus on two general types of abuse: abuse of the intent of the Code, particularly Subchapter K, which governs partnerships; and abuse of the benefits of the partnership form ('abuse of entity'). With regard to the rules against abuse of the Code and a partnership transaction, the following will be considered:

- a* whether the partnership is bona fide and the transaction at issue has a substantial business purpose;
- b* whether the transaction's substance matches its form; and
- c* whether the tax consequences of the transaction properly reflect income (aside from allowed deviations).

If the IRS determines that a transaction is abusive, it has the authority to recast the transaction to be taxable.<sup>47</sup> The entity abuse rules generally empower the IRS to treat a partnership as an aggregate of its partners as appropriate to carry out the purposes of the Code and regulations.

IX DOUBLE TAXATION TREATIES

The United States has entered into numerous tax treaties with other countries.<sup>48</sup> These treaties generally provide for relief from double taxation in both jurisdictions. They also routinely provide for exchange of information between the jurisdictions' respective tax authorities to, inter alia, facilitate tax enforcement efforts. Without such agreements, the IRS would be prohibited by the Code from sharing taxpayer return information with other countries. Agreements to share tax information about taxpayers may cover income, estate, gift and other taxes.<sup>49</sup>

The general rule of treaty interpretation is to construe the treaty language consistently with the expectations of the signatories. The specific rules for treaty interpretation vary depending upon whether the issue is the imposition of US tax on foreign taxpayers or the imposition of foreign tax on a US taxpayer. The interpretation for the purposes of US taxation of foreign taxpayers is based on the treaty itself, any related protocols and agreements, 46 Associated Wholesale Grocers, Inc v. Commissioner, 927 F2d 1517 (10th Cir 1991).

47 Nevada Partners Fund LLC v. United States, 714 FSupp2d 598 (D Miss 2010) (multistep strategy using tiered partnerships involved transactions lacking economic substance, and IRS's recharacterisation as taxable under Section 1.701-2 ruled valid).

48 Currently there are 68 tax treaties in force. See www.irs.gov/Businesses/International-Businesses/United-States-Income-Tax-Treaties---A-to-Z.

49 The US may also enter into a separate agreement called a tax information exchange agreement to further facilitate information exchange with a country.

Treasury regulations, rulings and case law. Furthermore, specific terms may vary in meaning from treaty to treaty.<sup>50</sup> For example, in Harrison v. Commissioner,<sup>51</sup> a German citizen and US resident employed by the German Defence Administration was not eligible for an exemption under the NATO Status of Forces Agreement because she did not qualify as a civilian of the German military under the specific definitions of that agreement. However, an established interpretation under one treaty may provide guidance as to the meaning of that term in another treaty.<sup>52</sup>

Recent cases requiring the application of these treaties involve both procedural and substantive issues. For example, in Net Promotion, Inc v. United States,<sup>53</sup> the French Tax Authority (FTA) began investigating the tax liability of a company with mailing addresses in France and Washington State. Pursuant to the US–France tax treaty, the FTA wrote to the IRS requesting certain financial information, including bank statements regarding an account at US Bank National Association (Bank) owned by the taxpayer or its representative. Pursuant to IRS protocols, the request was reviewed and approved by the competent US authority. The touchstone for this approval was parity. In other words, the competent US authority found that the same type of information sought by the FTA would be available to the United States upon request to France. Secondly, the competent authority judged that the FTA's request met a 'relevancy' threshold (i.e., that the requested information might produce information relevant to the taxpayer's French tax liabilities). The IRS issued a summons to the Bank that the taxpayer thereafter moved to quash in the district court. The district court evaluated the summons under the normal rules applicable to summons and found that the IRS, with the supporting affidavit of the competent authority, had made the required showing. The taxpayer argued that it had no nexus with France and therefore that the IRS improperly issued the summons. The court rejected this argument, noting that the question of whether in fact the taxpayer had French tax liabilities was not relevant to the question of the propriety of the summons.

What is important to note about this case is that, as long as the IRS satisfies the procedural requirements (including requirements for summons issued through a treaty provision), a summons issued pursuant to a treaty request will be honoured. It is up to the taxpayer to dispute with the foreign authority whether in fact it has any tax liability. A court will not second-guess the determination made by the competent authority that appropriate procedures were followed, including the determination that the information sought by the foreign tax authority is relevant to its investigation.<sup>54</sup>

Many cases involve the application of treaty provisions with respect to non-US nationals. In one relatively recent case, Retief Goosen v. Commissioner,<sup>55</sup> a professional golfer disputed the imposition of tax on certain endorsement income he earned worldwide. The taxpayer, a non-resident alien, argued on various grounds, including that the US–UK tax treaty prohibited the imposition of the tax at dispute. Under the treaty, the United Kingdom taxes a UK resident non-domiciliary on non-UK-sourced income only to the extent the income is remitted to or received in the United Kingdom. The US is prohibited from taxing the UK resident on specified kinds of income to avoid double taxation. The court then focused on the taxpayer's evidence that the income he had earned had in fact been remitted to or received by the UK, and concluded that the taxpayer had not carried his burden of proof regarding the actual mechanics of the remittance in question. Where treaty benefits hinge on specific facts, taxpayers should be well aware of those facts and plan ahead to ensure that they will be able to defend their claim of treaty benefits upon later IRS audit. Retief Goosen is a particularly well-known individual, and therefore someone that the IRS is more likely to audit than others, and who may, rightly or wrongly, be perceived as tending to take additional risks on his returns.

The Tax Court again considered the interpretation of a tax treaty in the context of a professional golfer in Sergio Garcia v. Commissioner.<sup>56</sup> Here the question was whether Mr Garcia's product endorsement income fell under Article 12, addressing royalty income, or Article 17, addressing sportspersons' income, of the US–Switzerland tax treaty. The Tax Court relied upon the Treasury Technical Explanation, which gave an example of a professional singer's income that included sale of recordings of a live performance and concluded that the sales of the recordings constituted royalty income under Article 12, whereas income for the actual performance was covered by Article 17. Because the product endorsement income was not substantially connected to the taxpayer's golfing in the United States, the Tax Court concluded that it was royalty income that only Switzerland could tax.

X AREAS OF FOCUS

Unquestionably, the IRS is devoting significant resources to enforcement in cross-border circumstances. Given today's increasing globalisation and the unprecedented mobility of taxpayers and capital, the IRS views this as a particularly fruitful area in which to crack down on abuses such as tax evasion, technical tax shelters and aggressive transfer pricing practices. As part of this focus, the IRS is working closely with certain major treaty partners to combat tax avoidance in their respective jurisdictions. The Joint International Tax Shelter Information Centre (JITSIC) provides coordination among these nations to identify and stop abusive cross-border practices. Such coordination will only increase in the future. The IRS has created a separate exchange of information (EOI) office with headquarters in Washington, DC. The office has one programme manager and 30 employees with varied backgrounds, including law, accounting and economics. The EOI office handles all cross-border requests for information pursuant to tax treaties or other information sharing agreements between the US and other nations. Of these requests, 70 per cent are from other nations and 30 per cent are requests from the US. A US taxpayer typically is not notified of a foreign government request for information if the IRS already has the information in its possession. Otherwise, the IRS will issue an IDR to obtain the information from the taxpayer. In late 2014, the IRS announced the creation of international practice units by LB&I's international practice networks (IPNs). The units are slide decks that train agents on international issues. The 56 Sergio Garcia v. Commissioner, 140 TC 141 (2013).

IPNs were formed to facilitate information sharing between IRS agents. There are about 150 separate units at this time, which cover the various 'building blocks' of international tax.<sup>57</sup> The most recent practice unit titled 'IRC 367(d) Transactions in Conjunction with Cost Sharing Arrangements (CSA)' focuses on outbound transfers of intangible property.

Revelations involving US taxpayers' use of Swiss and other foreign banks to avoid taxation have shone a harsh spotlight on potential offshore tax abuses. The IRS's response has been equally harsh, through prosecution of US taxpayers and accomplices, and in absentia, indictments of foreign persons considered by the government to be complicit in offshore tax evasion. Switzerland's oldest private bank, Wegelin & Co, announced it would be ceasing operations after pleading guilty to facilitating tax evasion. To further combat perceived offshore abuses, the IRS has instituted an offshore voluntary disclosure programme that allows taxpayers to come forward and declare previously unreported foreign-sourced income and assets.<sup>58</sup> While taxpayers who take advantage of this programme escape criminal penalties, they pay a heavy civil penalty based primarily on the highest foreign asset value during an eight-year review period.

In August 2013, the United States Department of Justice and the Swiss government announced a disclosure programme that enables Swiss banks not currently under investigation to voluntarily disclose US account holders who are not in compliance with their US reporting obligations. Participating banks have paid substantial penalties, and in return are eligible for non-prosecution agreements with the US government. The Department of Justice recently announced that the last Swiss bank participants had resolved their liabilities under this programme.<sup>59</sup>

In addition to targeting offshore evasion, the IRS continues to devote substantial resources to auditing taxpayers' transfer pricing reporting and methods. The IRS Chief Counsel emphasised the enforcement efforts the IRS is undertaking in this area in remarks he made to Congress in 2012:

The IRS has continued to marshal, coordinate and augment its resources dedicated to transfer pricing enforcement. In 2011, a new executive position was created to oversee all transfer pricing functions, to set overall strategy in the area and to coordinate work on our most important cases. In building a new function devoted exclusively to tackling our transfer pricing challenges, within the past year we have been able to recruit dozens of transfer pricing experts and economists with substantial private sector experience who are now working hard to help us stay on the cutting edge of enforcement and issue resolution. This new transfer pricing operation will operate as a single, integrated team with a global focus, a unified strategy and a robust knowledge base.

A survey of transfer pricing cases filed by public companies shows that the IRS is effectively carrying out its plans. Several major companies are disputing proposed IRS adjustments, including Coca Cola, Inc, which filed a petition in the Tax Court in December 2015 disputing a US$9 billion proposed transfer pricing adjustment, Amazon.com, Inc, Microsoft Corp, and The 3M Company. Amazon filed a petition in the Tax Court in late 2012 disputing US$1.5 billion taxes due to proposed transfer pricing adjustments. The trial took place in early 2015, and the case is currently awaiting decision.<sup>60</sup>

Amazon's dispute is indicative of current IRS enforcement practices in the transfer pricing area. Like many multinational companies, Amazon entered into cost-sharing arrangements with its foreign subsidiaries. Pursuant to applicable Treasury regulations, those subsidiaries were required to make 'buy-in' payments to reflect the value of pre-existing intangibles provided by Amazon for the development of the operations of its foreign subsidiaries. Among other issues, the IRS in audit focused on the value of the buy-in payment. To that end, the IRS audit team engaged outside economists to analyse and opine on the value of the pre-existing intangibles. The economists issued a report that concluded that the value of the intangibles was more than 10 times higher than the value used to determine the buy-in payment. The economists used a specific valuation method, the discounted cash flow method, and collected three sets of data (future cash flow estimates, cash flow timing and a discount rate) in the application of that method. In its petition to the Tax Court, Amazon attacked the discounted cash flow method and compared it to the method used by the IRS in Veritas Software, in which the Tax Court found that the IRS's determination was arbitrary, capricious and unreasonable.<sup>61</sup>

Whatever the merits of the case, it shows that the IRS is taking aggressive positions regarding buy-in payment valuation and is willing to incur the expense at the audit stage of hiring outside economists to support those positions.

The IRS is also attuned to cross-border structures, which it considers to be potentially abusive and subject to economic sham analysis. For example, the IRS is currently targeting two structures: foreign tax credit generators and securities lending transactions. Foreign tax credit generators initially came to the attention of the IRS by way of information shared through JITSIC. According to the IRS, there are two kinds of abusive form of this transaction: one that is designed to recover the foreign tax claimed as a credit on the US income tax return, and one that is designed to eliminate the income that gives rise to the credit. Typically, some form of fee is paid to share the benefits of the foreign tax credit claimed by the US party to the transaction. The IRS has been successfully battling with taxpayers over these transactions in audit and in the courts.<sup>62</sup>

According to the IRS, abusive securities lending transactions are designed to avoid the mandatory 30 per cent withholding on US-sourced income payments to foreign persons. The IRS has described these transactions in the following manner: typically they involve the transfer of US corporation stock held by a foreign person to a foreign affiliate of a US financial institution in a securities lending transaction. The affiliate is typically in a low-tax jurisdiction and is designated as the securities borrower. Pursuant to the transaction, the foreign affiliate will pay substitute dividends to the foreign customer in an amount equal to 70 per cent of any dividend paid on the underlying loaned shares. By relying on prior (and now modified) IRS guidance, specifically IRS Notice 97-66, the foreign affiliate argues that because both the foreign affiliate and the foreign customer were subject to the same 30 per cent US withholding tax rate, it can pay the substitute dividend to the foreign customer without withholding and paying any US tax. The transactions typically include an ‘enhancement fee’ valued at about 66 per cent of the lost dividend amount. According to the IRS, such enhancement fees vary depending upon the transaction. They could be direct fees paid to the foreign stockholder or increased interest income through over-collateralisation of the stock loans.

XI OUTLOOK AND CONCLUSIONS

Recent trends in IRS enforcement policy show an increasingly aggressive tax agency with respect to certain high-risk issues. These trends can be explained in large part by two factors: the desire to increase revenue in a deficit-ridden economy, and the related need to use limited resources as efficiently as possible. The IRS routinely receives fewer budgetary dollars than it requests, and in light of revelations regarding alleged targeting of certain advocacy groups, Congress has pared back the agency’s budget. However, the agency must nevertheless meet the demands of its master, the federal government, for revenue. Its multi-pronged solution, while understandable, is not always welcome. First, it has begun to place increasing disclosure obligations on taxpayers, including disclosure of uncertain tax positions and of foreign assets. Through these disclosures, the IRS reasons, less of its audit resources have to be spent on finding potential underpayments. Second, it has pursued, both in legislation and enforcement, enhanced penalty imposition, thereby creating a more inhospitable environment for taxpayers who might take overly aggressive return positions or fail to disclose information. Third, it has begun to devote audit resources to risk-identified areas to maximise dollars collected for each audit dollar spent.

i Increased taxpayer disclosure

To the consternation of many in the Tax Bar, in 2009, the IRS proposed requiring companies to attach a schedule to their income tax returns that would disclose all uncertain tax positions that were reflected on their financial statements. Many were concerned that providing such a schedule would provide a road map to the IRS of all the arguable positions in the return, and that the IRS would simply propose audit adjustments for those positions. One of the most controversial aspects of the proposal was a requirement that taxpayers describe the reason why the position was uncertain. In other words, a taxpayer would, in effect, have to tell the IRS what arguments could be made against the position it took in its return. After much discussion, the IRS proceeded with a somewhat more relaxed requirement in Form ‘Schedule UTP’, which was released in September 2010.<sup>63</sup> The IRS dropped the requirement to describe the reason for the uncertainty of the position, and also stated that it did not want the taxpayer to reveal information that was protected by work product. Form 1120, 1120L, 1120PC and 1120F filers that issue or are included in audited financial statements, and that have total assets equal to or exceeding US$50 million, must attach the schedule to their 2012 return (US$10 million for the 2014 filing year).

As a result of legislative changes in 2010, the IRS now requires individual taxpayers to identify specified foreign financial assets with their income tax returns.<sup>64</sup> The IRS issued Form 8938, 'Statement of Foreign Financial Assets', on which the information must be reported. As stated in the instructions for this form, the IRS will issue regulations requiring domestic entities to file Form 8938 if the entity is formed or availed of to hold specified foreign financial assets that exceed a certain reporting threshold.

ii Increase in penalties

As already noted, the IRS is increasingly imposing accuracy-related penalties in audit situations. Moreover, its authority to impose penalties has been broadened by recent legislation. The 2010 Health Care Act, as amended by the 2010 Health Care Reconciliation Act, created a new accuracy-related penalty under Section 6662 for disallowances relating to claimed benefits from transactions without economic substance, and a new accuracy-related penalty for underpayments relating to undisclosed foreign financial understatements.

iii Targeted audits

As noted, the operating division of the IRS responsible for auditing larger businesses, LB&I, has adopted a campaign audit method whereby it will no longer conduct general audits of these businesses. Instead, through a process of information gathering and analysis, LB&I will identify high-risk areas that will be developed into a series of 'campaigns'. Audit teams, called 'issue teams', will receive instruction much like the practice unit instruction discussed above, and will coordinate their audits with the broader LB&I effort to audit and oppose taxpayer positions in these areas.

<sup>64</sup> Taxpayers already have a requirement to file a separate 'Report of Foreign Financial Accounts', or 'FBAR', to notify the Treasury Department of foreign accounts held directly or indirectly.
